Puppy Murderers

STOP THEM

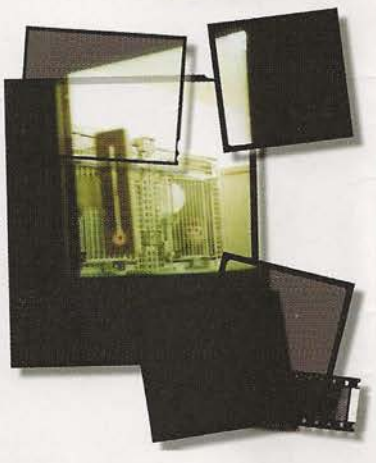

DON'T EVER LET GO BECAUSE WE'RE ALL THEY'VE GOT

Hope and suffering by Michelle Rokke

I sit here and I wonder if they're dead. So bouncy. So full of life. Just babies – seven months old. Happy? Well, they could be happy. All so eager to please, waiting to be loved. I close my eyes and I see row after row of cages, each holding uniquely different, soft wrinkled puppies staring hopefully at a single door in a dank, barren room.

Each time that cage door opened they came to expect pain. Maybe they came to accept it. But still they waited. The anticipation on their little faces when I walked in. The dancing, barking, joyous excitement of seeing someone – anyone – anything other than cement and stainless steel. All anxious to be the one singled out for attention. But once the cage door opened they came to learn hesitancy. They learned mistrust of their human caretakers, but still they hoped. I know they did.

One at a time, I picked up each of those reluctant hesitant pups, and when I held them in my arms I could feel their hearts pound as they pressed their bodies into mine, could feel their wet noses in my neck as they snuggled closer – to smell – to feel – to know human skin and human smells – something other than rubber and tyvex and plastic. A smell other than alcohol. A sensation other than pain.

And when I delivered them safely to the exercise pen to play and romp with one of their own for those few precious minutes each week, oh how they danced. They ran circles of joy in the tiny cage and yipped with pleasure. A single, seldom-known moment of bliss within a product testing lab.

And when I took them back to their now clean steel cell, again they pressed close – for comfort and warmth. Heads twisting backwards to touch my cheek, not wanting to be returned to the cold misery of isolation. Sometimes pressing back so hard they stumbled when their feet touched the cage floor. Forced to live for this moment with their noses nestled into a warm human neck. Forgetting for a few minutes the daily ritual when rubber tubes are jammed down their throats and the poison, someday to be called an over-the-counter drug, is pumped in.

These young dogs keep an unfailing hopefulness that the confinement, the daily toxic dosing followed by hours of illness are but a window in time – a hurdle that must be crossed before they can settle into a happy life with a kind family and maybe a blanket of their own. They sit. And they wait. And they hope and they suffer.
Taken from their cage one last time. Held down for one last needle. Darkness closes in. The dream of feeling soft grass underfoot fades. And then there is nothing.....

EDITORIAL

2003 has been the most effective year yet in the war against the animal killers at HLS. We saw strategies refined and pressure focused on to targets that matter with devastating results for HLS and victory after victory for us. With the world's biggest insurance company Marsh McLennan withdrawing their support for HLS, we were freed up globally at the start of 2003 to launch the Japanese Customer Campaign with full force. In the UK five hardcore Japanese customers tried to stifle any form of protest against them by obtaining High Court injunctions. These have been a miserable failure with protest against these companies intensifying as activists stand up for their right to put pressure on those who are responsible for the suffering and deaths of many thousands of animals at HLS. This year also saw the launch of the Suppliers Campaign with 33 supply companies severing their contracts with HLS after bowing to public pressure.

We are constantly humbled and inspired by all of you out there fighting so hard to close down HLS. The spirit of SHAC is invincible, it is all of you fighting with ingenuity, courage and dogged resolve, never giving in and never deserting those animals inside HLS crying out for their freedom. A letter from a man called Mr Barry in London said it all. Mr Barry sells antique fountain pens. He is elderly and has had several heart attacks. He writes letters to targets of the campaign in beautiful copper-plate handwriting asking them to sever their links with HLS. Mr Barry was threatened by Scottish police who told him to stop writing to customers and suppliers as he was harassing them. This was his response: "I have resolved if threatened with prosecution to call their bluff. If I am taken to Scotland I will ask for an ambulance as I have just had another heart attack. If they refuse and I am taken ill in a police car, think of how much publicity this will give SHAC. I cannot think of a better way to go than in a blaze of publicity for the cruelty at HLS." People like Mr Barry and all of you who are fighting to close HLS are the reason we will win and see the day HLS is razed to the ground. We never give in and we never give up, no matter what.

So we go into 2004 with the will to win, our hearts filled with the souls of all those animals that have suffered and died pitiful, sad, lonely, terrified deaths inside that evil hell-hole since it was set up in 1952. Their tortured souls are crying out for justice. Let's get on with it and CLOSE THE BASTARDS DOWN.
Always for the animals,

MARCH Against the murderers

Dec 06

The Dec 6th National March and Rally held in Huntingdon town centre was well-attended by SHAC supporters who travelled to Huntingdon from all over the UK.

Greg Avery from SHAC gave a rousing speech about the campaign, and then everyone set off on one of the loudest marches any of us have been on in a long time. We marched into Huntingdon town centre with megaphones blaring, airhorns going off and everyone shouting and making a hell of a noise.

In Huntingdon town centre we stopped for speeches. Trish from London gave a moving, powerful speech about how she got involved in the campaign. As a mother of 5, soon to be a grand-mother, and working in a full-time job, Trish urged everyone to give 100% of their spare time as she does to destroying HLS. Trish made a lot of new people feel they can have an important input into closing HLS even if they work or have a family.

Then Greg from SHAC gave an impassioned, angry talk about how everyone needs to stay focused on HLS, their customers and suppliers and keep piling on the pressure until they go under. He reminded everyone of HLS's precarious financial situation and inspired everyone to keep fighting til the bitter end.

Mel Broughton from SPEAC was next on with a powerful talk on SHAC, SPEAC and the animal liberation movement. Mel reminded everyone also of the activists who have lost their lives fighting the abusers: Jill Phipps, Barry Horne, Tom Worby and Mike Hill.

Mela from SHAC Germany finished off with a thought-provoking and moving speech about the animal rights movement in relation to other movements for change throughout history.

Everyone then marched noisily through the rest of Huntingdon town centre and back to the coaches and stalls at Riverside, where Amanda from the Save the Newchurch Guinea Pigs campaign gave an inspiring speech about what a mess the Hall's guinea pig breeding business is in.

All in all the Dec 6th demo was a passionate, angry, heartfelt demo uniting activists and campaigns from all over the country together to renew their determination and sheer will to close down HLS and all the other evil, disgusting hell-holes run by the worst filth of the earth. These filth are learning the lesson that if you are responsible for animals dying in fear and agony, then you will be held accountable for your crimes.

SHAC has had unverified reports of home demos against directors of HLS suppliers taking place after the demo, as well as reports of damage caused to offices of companies supplying HLS.

Would you Adam and Eve it?

While Mel was doing his speech, some member of the public, who was unfortunate enough to have chosen to have dreadlocks as a hairstyle, attempted to do some shopping. Sadly for him, the police informed him he was a protestor and refused to let him leave the square. They later repeated the same on some woman who happened to have a rainbow coloured jumper on. Nice one cops!

"Your Shout"

Your shout is a new column for anyone who is active for SHAC to voice their opinion. If you have got something to say then send it to us, by email preferably but post is fine.
Trish has been with the campaign for 2 years now and is an inspiration to us all. As a mother of 5 children, about to be a grand-mother and working full-time, Trish is living proof that nothing can stop you fighting to close HLS with all your heart if you want to badly enough– all you need is commitment and passion, and Trish has plenty of both.

"I haven't got the time today. Oh it's raining. I'm too tired today, I've already done something this week..." If these are the thoughts you've had at times remember we all have these thoughts too, BUT that's not going to help the animals in HLS - they are suffering day and night. (FOR WHAT)
Their lives and their deaths will be meaningless unless we do something about it. I've listened and I've learnt about the campaign from some of the most dedicated animal rights people I have ever met, and I constantly, like them, wish I could walk into HLS and free all those sad and helpless animals. But I can't. What I can do though is to make sure life out there is not so good for companies, suppliers, and the shareholders that use and support Huntington Life Sciences. The more we ALL do the harder it is for HLS to function, WE CAN FINISH THEM OFF AND WE WILL.

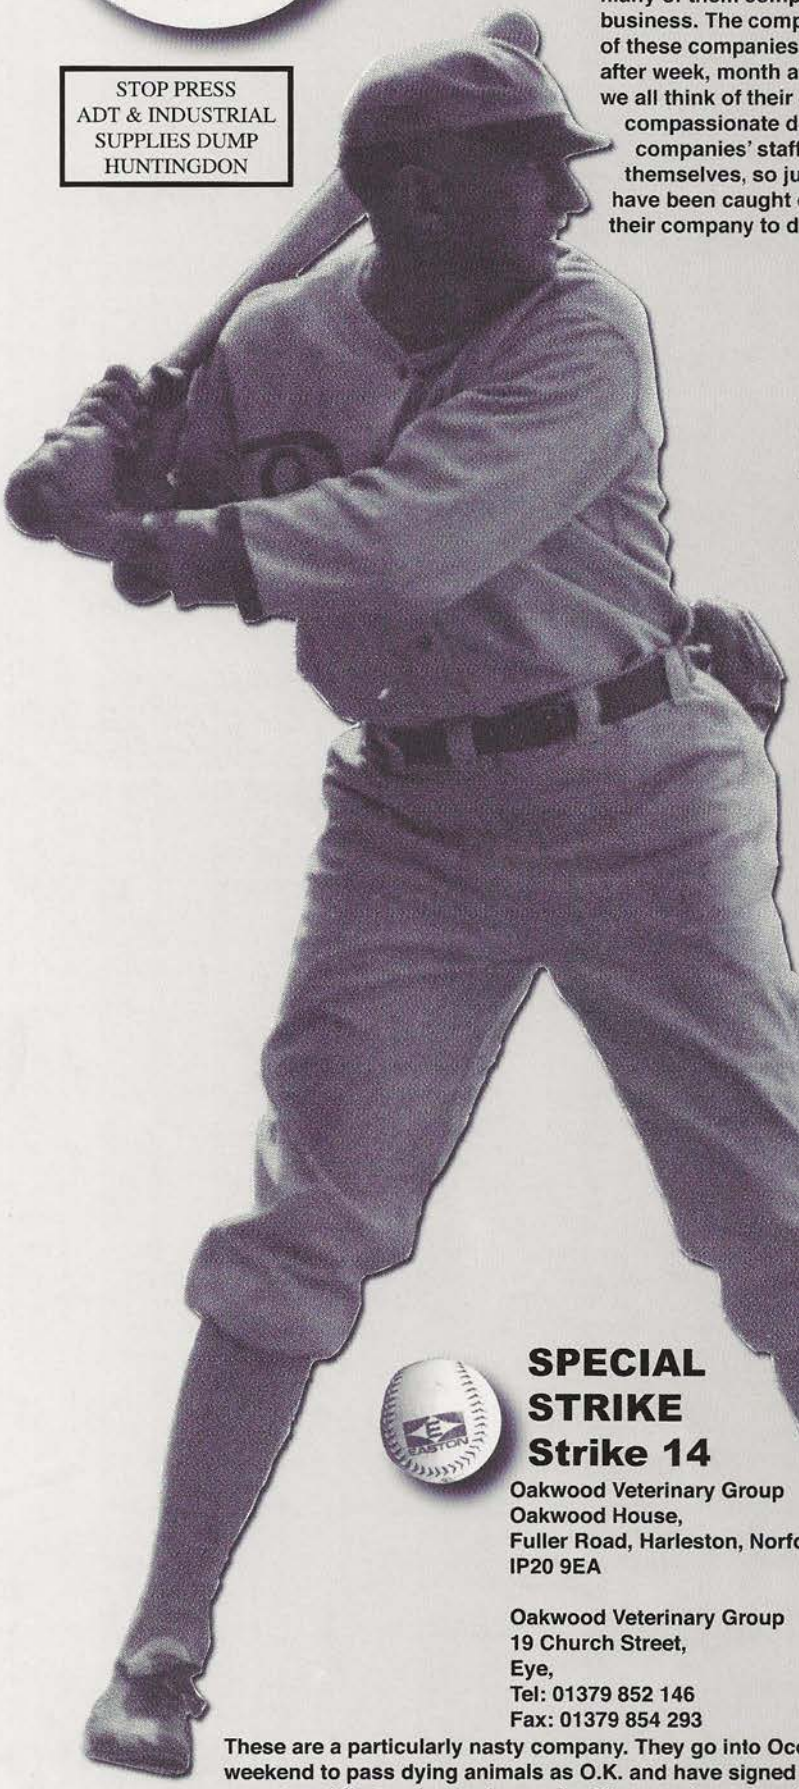

My life has been saddened beyond words by the amount of animal abuse in the world, my stomach hurts when I think of the pain the animals are in constantly til their deaths.
Can we all really put our hands on our hearts and say I've done my bit or I'm already doing enough. REMEMBER that little bit more just might be the finish of HLS.
I'm sure that every animal rights person wants nothing more than to be at Huntington Life Sciences' gates when they close to be able to carry out every dog, cat, primate, pig and other terrified animal away from the HELL HOLE to their FREEDOM. Let's do it all together PLEASE.

The suppliers campaign last year was devastating with HLS losing 33 suppliers, many of them companies essential to them being able to carry on their animal-killing business. The companies listed below all provide services to HLS. The directors of these companies know exactly who they are dealing with and supply HLS week after week, month after month, year after year. Now it is time to show them that what we all think of their disgusting, immoral collusion with HLS and ask them to make a compassionate decision to sever their contracts with HLS. Remember a lot of these companies' staff are sympathetic and may have even given us the information themselves, so just explain exactly what sort of company HLS is and what they have been caught out for. You will find many of them joining forces with us to get their company to dump HLS.

Covance in Germany blown wide open by undercover expose - HLS is a carbon copy

For 5 months the BUAV had an undercover investigator inside Huntingdon's main rival Covance in their German lab at Munster. The catalogue of cruelty he uncovered is deeply shocking. Covance carries out exactly the same experiments as Huntingdon Life Sciences and all HLS's top management used to work for Covance.What you see here is a carbon copy of what is happening inside Huntingdon right now.

"For five months, a BUAV operative called 'Marcus' worked undercover as an animal technician at Covance, Münster, in Germany. This laboratory tests almost exclusively on non-human primates.

This Covance facility is likely to be one of the largest users of non-human primates for vivisection in the whole of Europe. Working mainly with cynomolgus macaques (imported from Mauritius, China & Vietnam), Marcus witnessed the daily suffering of monkeys (including heavily pregnant females) subjected to the abhorrent routine of pharmaceutical toxicity testing.

Murderers never change. This picture was taken in the early 90's inside Covance's lab in the U.K. Brian Cass was the managing director when this picture was taken. He tried to defend obscene animal cruelty and still does just as Covance are doing now. You can NEVER trust these monsters or believe them EVER

It was to be a gruelling challenge, submerged in a world where the animals were treated with callous indifference, tormented by the staff, separated from each other, isolated in barren cages, regularly and forcibly pumped full of drugs and eventually killed.

Globally Covance offers just about every conceivable method of animal poisoning available. Its list of 'services' makes sickening reading, including acute, subchronic & chronic toxicity, reproductive toxicology, neurotoxicity, as well as what are called 'speciality services' such as inhalation toxicology, primate toxicology, continuous infusion studies and ocular toxicity studies.

DIARY OF INVESTIGATOR

"New arrivals were carried into the unit in groups of six to eight monkeys in each cage. They were extremely frightened. It was easy to see the panic in their eyes. They desperately held onto each other crying as, one by one, they were forcibly dragged from the cage. Sometimes the struggling was so bad that as the monkeys were pulled out of the cage, the cage door would smash down cutting their tails of hitting a leg.

The whole process was like a production line. First the monkeys were anaesthetised and tattooed on their chest. Next their abdomen was cut open and an optical fibre lens inserted to examine internal organs. No pain relief was given before they were placed in a tiny metal quarantine cage, which was to be their 'home' for the next few weeks.

The cages were bare. Slowly the monkeys started to come round from the anaesthetic. They would stumble around and often collapse, falling and knocking their heads on the metal bars. They would awaken to the awful sounds of blaring music and staff shouting. In total shock at this horror, the monkeys would sit motionless and silent in their tiny prison. This had now become their hell.

I found working in the Reproductive Toxicity Unit deeply upsetting. The unit was full of pregnant females and mothers with their infants. The cages were just as barren as those for the other monkeys. The infants were forcibly separated from their mothers on a regular basis to be weighed and for blood to be taken. The mothers would desperately try to protect their young, crying out and smashing themselves against the cage walls. It was really difficult to watch the desperation in the mothers' eyes as they fought the inevitable. Two technicians would literally pull the mother and baby apart by pulling on their tails and arms.

Every day hundreds of monkeys were dosed with test substances. On one occasion I watched as the other technicians stood around joking, laughing and talking to the researchers during the dosing of one monkey after another. Music was blaring in the background. One monkey resisted and the technician became aggressive and began shaking the monkey who started crying out. The researcher had problems trying to force the tube down his throat. She was chatting to the animal technicians and moving to the music. The technician holding the monkey began moving the animal to the rhythm on the radio. The researcher eventually got the tube into the animal and pumped the test substance into his stomach. The monkey appeared to go into a state of shock and stopped struggling. Only his eyes betrayed the panic and fear."

Remember this is the reality of life every single day for the animals trapped inside HLS. This horror is the reason why there will be no let-up and no escape for companies who think it is acceptable to brutalise and abuse animals for profit. For all the terrified, suffering, innocent victims of the filthy deviants who work inside animal-testing labs please fight this war with every second of every day you possible can. The animals deserve nothing less than our utmost dedication and will to win. Their lives are in our hands – so let's go to war and WIN.

ALF IN ACTION
Two large liberations of animals in the U.K.

21 GOATS RESCUED FROM HLS's GOAT SUPPLIER

"In the early hours of Sunday 14th of December the ALF entered Water Farm Goat Centre near Bridgewater, Somerset. Water Farm Goat Centre breed goats and supply them to laboratories. Earlier on in the year it was reported that 43 goats were liberated from this establishment. Judging by the filthy conditions inside the farm the time for a return visit was well overdue.This time twenty one beautiful goats, many of them pregnant, were carefully removed from the hell hole and ferried away to awaiting vehicles. These animals will now be able to live out their lives in caring homes free from the fear and pain of the vivisectors' scalpel."

700 MICE LIBERATED FROM U.K. LAB

"In the early hours of Sunday morning, the ALF cut through the razor wire surrounding Wickham Labs in Hampshire, and made their way over the fence. A hole was cut into the roof of the animal unit. The security cameras within the unit were put out of action, and the liberators jumped down amongst the cages.The rooms within the animal unit contained nearly 700 mice, all of which were passed back up through the roof, and spirited to freedom.

Documentation taken from the unit showed that these mice were liberated days before they were due to be experimented on. Instead of their last week before Christmas being one of pain, agony and death, for these mice it will be the best yule time ever. All of the animals found within Wickham have been placed in loving homes, where they are free to live out their natural lives free from pain, suffering and neglect.

The documents taken also contained details of hideous experiments for such useless items as Botox, carried out on mice, rats, guinea pigs and rabbits. At the time of the raid the only animals on the premises were mice.This is not an isolated incident, this is part of the a much wider war for total animal liberation. Until every animal is free we will continue to fight, whether it be Wickham, HLS, Cambridge University or anywhere else. This is a warning to you all!"

This story has a tragic ending. Some days after this raid, the police raided the safe house that all the mice were in apart from 37 who had been rehomed elsewhere and took them all back again and arrested everyone there. Apparently they had been the subject of a surveillance operation. How obscene is it that with all the murders, robberies, rapes and other violent, disgusting crimes going on, the police see fit to spend public money on watching people whose only crime is compassion and valuable man hours taking these creatures that had been saved from fear and suffering back to be mutilated by perverts at Wickham labs?

See ya
Daiichi director & Chiron manager both resign

In one week over Christmas SHAC received letters from two people high up in the animal suffering industry. First up was van der Kwaak (no I'm not making it up) who is the manager of Huntingdon customer Chiron in Holland.

"TO SHAC
I have resigned as Managing Director of Chiron B.V. in Amsterdam, the Netherlands. As of today, I am no longer an employee and I am not otherwise affiliated with Chiron or any other pharmaceutical company.

Please publish this message on your website and inform your network accordingly.

Amsterdam,

Rene van der Kwaak"

CHIRON

Then we got a letter from the most senior person in the U.K. for Daiichi, Prof John O'Grady, saying he had left Daiichi due to ill health. Some of you may have seen in the press that O'Grady has been the subject of at least two bomb hoaxes by the ALF, one of which saw his road sealed off for over 10 hours.

ADT STAFF DETAILS LEAKED TO SHAC

In the last days of December 2003 a member of staff from within HLS supplier ADT leaked information listing all their regional management structure giving their names, direct line numbers and mobile phone numbers. ADT maintain and install all the alarms etc on the animal units at Huntingdon. It would seem that yet another person is prepared to put their job on the line to help out the campaign.

They said it...
No group is more dangerous and determined to end animal testing than the Europe-based Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS

There has been an unprecedented amount of newspaper coverage on drug failures.

Glaxo chief: Our drugs do not work on most patients
By Steve Connor, Science Editor 08 December 2003
The Independent

A senior executive with Britain's biggest drugs company has admitted that most prescription medicines do not work on most people who take them. Allen Roses, worldwide vice-president of genetics at GlaxoSmithKline (GSK), said fewer than half of the patients prescribed some of the most expensive drugs actually derived any benefit from them.

It is an open secret within the drugs industry that most of its products are ineffective in most patients but this is the first time that such a senior drugs boss has gone public.

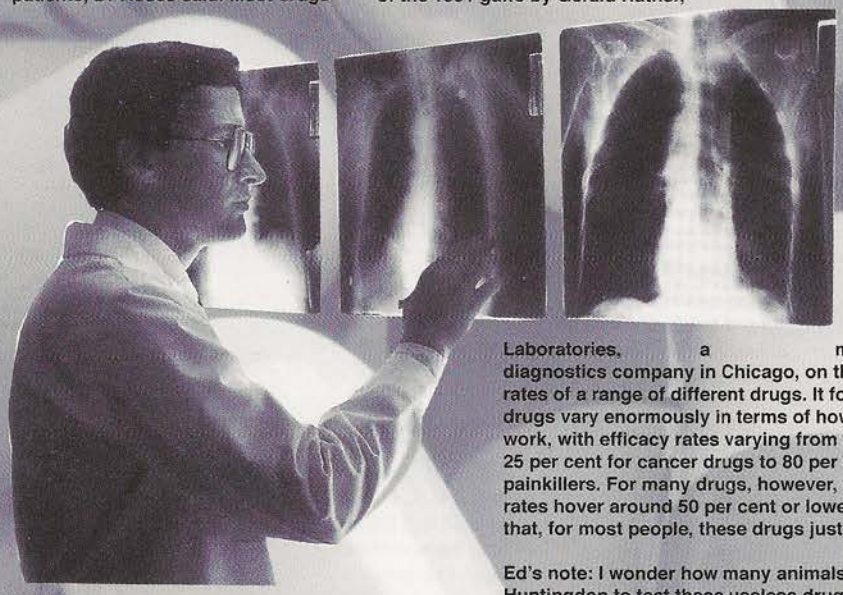

Drugs for Alzheimer's disease work in fewer than one in three patients, whereas those for cancer are only effective in a quarter of patients. Drugs for migraines, for osteoporosis, and arthritis work in about half the patients, Dr Roses said. Most drugs work in fewer than one in two patients mainly because the recipients carry genes that interfere in some way with the medicine, he said. "The vast majority of drugs - more than 90 per cent - only work in 30 or 50 per cent of the people," Dr Roses said.

Some industry analysts said Dr Roses's comments were reminiscent of the 1991 gaffe by Gerald Ratner, the jewellery boss, who famously said that his high street shops are successful because they sold "total crap". But others believe Dr Roses deserves credit for being honest about a little-publicised fact known to the drugs industry for many years. "Roses is a smart guy and what he is saying will surprise the public but not his colleagues," said one industry scientist.

The idea is to identify "responders" - people who benefit from the drug - with a simple and cheap genetic test that can be used to eliminate those non-responders who might benefit from another drug. This goes against a marketing culture within the industry that has relied on selling as many drugs as possible to the widest number of patients - a culture that has made GSK one of the most profitable pharmaceuticals companies, but which has also meant that most of its drugs are at best useless, and even possibly dangerous, for many patients.

Laboratories, a medical diagnostics company in Chicago, on the efficacy rates of a range of different drugs. It found that drugs vary enormously in terms of how well they work, with efficacy rates varying from as low as 25 per cent for cancer drugs to 80 per cent for painkillers. For many drugs, however, the efficacy rates hover around 50 per cent or lower, meaning that, for most people, these drugs just don't work.

Ed's note: I wonder how many animals died at Huntingdon to test these useless drugs?

Demolished: the myth that allows drugs giants to sell more By Steve Connor, Science Editor
08 December 2003

For years, the drugs industry has grown fat on a myth - the false belief that all drugs will work on just about everybody. That has essentially been the rationale for a culture that has encouraged doctors to prescribe first and ask questions later - at a cost to the NHS of £7.2bn a year in medicines.

Yet it has been an open secret within the drugs industry that most drugs do not work for most patients, a secret that has now been publicly aired for the first time by Allen Roses, the head of genetics at GlaxoSmithKline, Britain's biggest drugs company. In the past, drug companies have developed drugs aimed at the widest possible population. That was the most profitable strategy but one that ignored a basic fact in biology - people are different. Bringing a new drug to market is an expensive business costing tens of millions of pounds. It takes place in a culture of maximum possible sales for maximum possible profit - a culture that does not like to broadcast the fact that most drugs don't work for most people.
Dr Roses cited a study published three years ago by Brian Spear, a senior scientist at Abbott

Revealed: how drug firms 'hoodwink' medical journals
Pharmaceutical giants hire ghostwriters to produce articles - then put doctors' names on them
Sunday December 7, 2003 The Observer

Hundreds of articles in medical journals claiming to be written by academics or doctors have been penned by ghostwriters in the pay of drug companies, an Observer inquiry reveals.

The journals, bibles of the profession, have huge influence on which drugs doctors prescribe and the treatment hospitals provide. But The Observer has uncovered evidence that many articles written by so-called independent academics may have been penned by writers working for agencies which receive huge sums from drug companies to plug their products.

Estimates suggest that almost half of all articles published in journals are by ghostwriters. While doctors who have put their names to the papers can be paid handsomely for 'lending' their reputations, the ghostwriters remain hidden. They, and the involvement of the pharmaceutical firms, are rarely revealed.

These papers endorsing certain drugs are paraded in front of GPs as independent research to persuade them to prescribe the drugs.

An article published last February in the Journal of Alimentary Pharmacology , which specialises in stomach disorders, involved a medical writer working for drug giant AstraZeneca - a fact that was not revealed by the author.
The article, by a German doctor, acknowledged the 'contribution' of Dr Madeline Frame, but did not admit that she was a senior medical writer for AstraZeneca. The article essentially supported the use of a drug called Omeprazole - which is manufactured by AstraZeneca - for gastric ulcers, despite suggestions that it gave rise to more adverse reactions than similar drugs.

Dr Richard Smith, editor of the British Journal of Medicine, admitted ghostwriting was a 'very big problem'. 'We are being hoodwinked by the drug companies', he said.

Drugs for depressed children banned
The Guardian,
10 December 2003.

Modern antidepressant drugs which have made billions for the pharmaceutical industry will be banned from use in children today because of evidence, suppressed for years, that they can cause young patients to become suicidal. The decision has big implications for drug regulation. The agency - which is the government's watchdog body on drug safety - has reached this point only after intense pressure from patients and campaigners.

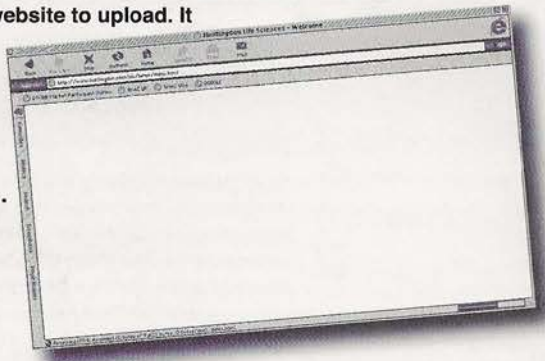

Public unease about these potential side-effects prompted the agency to investigate last year. It has looked at the details of clinical trials of depressed children that were in the hands of the drug companies in the late 1990s. These studies revealed the problem of suicidal behaviour in children, but the companies did not draw it to the attention of the regulators in the US or the UK.

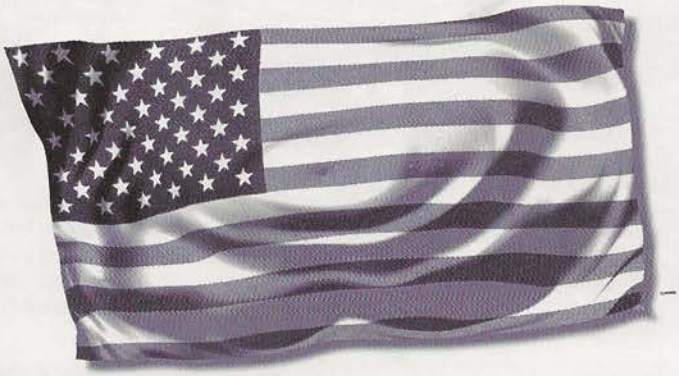

There's a surprise. So these companies, all HLS customers, knew their drugs made children kill themselves, but were quite happy to carry on allowing them to be prescribed to children. How evil is that.

Huntingdon's website brought down by Russian activists - website down for over 1 month

Just what a company competing in a market where it is already outflanked by all its peers needs: HLS's website has yet again been taken down by activists in Russia. Very good for business we're sure. For some weeks now it has been either impossible to get on their website or takes at least ten minutes for anything to appear. We are sure all the world's biggest pharmaceutical company bosses and staff have all the time in the world to twiddle their thumbs whilst waiting for HLS's website to upload. It would seem that if you get caught out over and over again for animal cruelty and fraud, even activists in Russia target you... As we go to press Huntingdon's website is still unobtainable.

HLS LOSE THEIR TRANSFER AGENT IN 5 HOURS FLAT

The campaign against HLS rages on in the USA with one of SHACUSA'a victories being the removal of HLS's transfer agent in 5 hours, an all-time record even by SHAC standards! Here's what happened:

"SHACUSA spent many weeks contacting Mellon in hopes of starting a dialogue regarding their relationship with Huntingdon as their transfer agent. Mellon ignored the repeated attempts. SHACUSA then moved on to phase 2 of the campaign, publishing office addresses of Mellon, with a call for letters, emails, phone calls and protests. 5 hours and multiple protests later, Mellon faxed over a statement saying they were halting all their services to HLS immediately."

Bloody typical! Someone always goes that bit too far on home demos

HLS CUSTOMERS AND SUPPLIERS KEEPING QUIET

"Just to let you know something quite interesting. I sent 80 questionnaires out to organisations that had been listed in your newsletters and on your web site as target suppliers and customers of HLS with a view to analysing how they managed the business while under pressure from SHAC.

The first response I got was from Special Operations at Cambridgeshire Constabulary asking me who I was and what I was doing! Needless to say I predict a very poor response and so far have received 9 replies from organisations saying they do not wish to share any information with me."

SHAC NORTHWEST

2003 has been an amazing year for SHAC. We are motivated by thoughts of the torture, pain and suffering going on inside HLS, haunted by these images we commit ourselves to 2004. HLS collaborators had better watch out because this year we are on a mission to see the end of this hellhole. Here's to the bulldozing of HLS!!

SHAC LONDON

There have been scores of demos against Daiichi despite what is now perceived to be a failed injunctive action taken by Daiichi & a handful of other customers of HLS, and also Sumitomo, and corporate shareholders in Japanese customers of HLS in London. It has been excellent to see the fruits of a strategy working. With the financial base of HLS all but wiped out, it was time to refocus on their customer base and supply chain. By the time the mid year figures came out, the results of regular demos naming & shaming customers & suppliers was clear for everyone to see: falling sales, revenue and share price. It's simply a matter of adopting the right strategy & tactics and sticking with them to the end.

PACAS

As far as the Peterborough and Cambridgeshire Animal Rights Coalition are concerned, 2003 was an amazing year for us. It is beyond words to describe our determination! And here is a message on behalf of all the animals you have ordered burnt, poisoned, electrocuted, disfigured and the babies born with defects and the children suffering from leukemia because of exposure to pesticides, FOREVER BURN IN HELL AND LET WHAT YOU HAVE DONE AND LIED ABOUT HAUNT YOU FOREVER!

SOUTH COAST SHAC

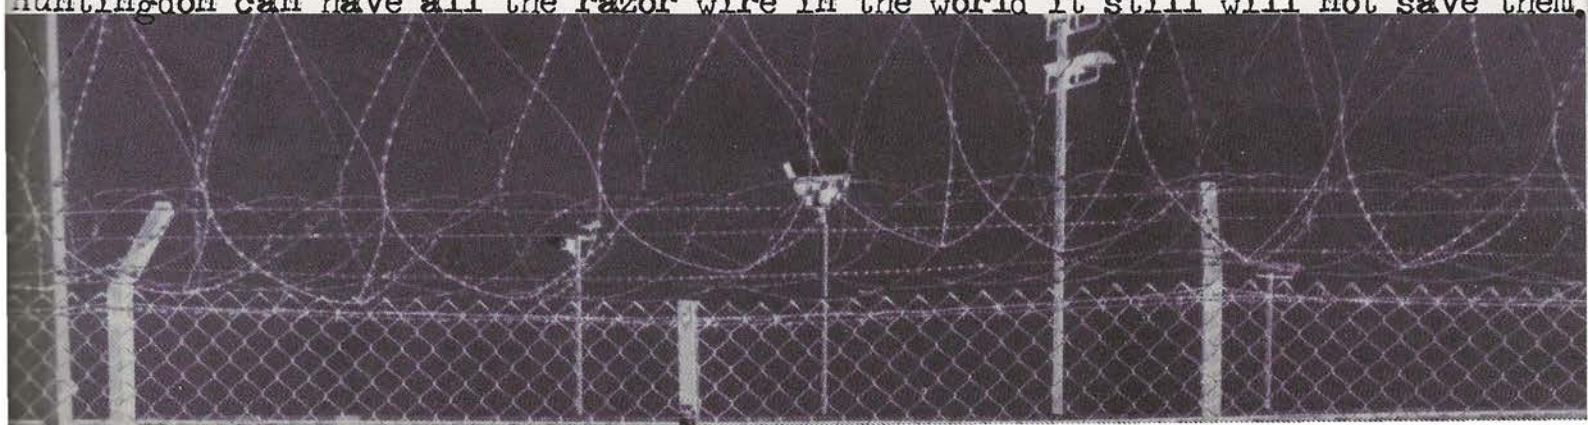

We storm into 2004 with renewed determination and energy to close HLS...and soon! Armed with evidence and the truth on our side, we WILL win and NOTHING will stop us. The animals have no-one. We act, we are relentless and we will never give up!

They said it...

The number of activists isn't huge, but their impact has been incredible.

said Mr Cass at a London business conference, May 2003

Huntingdon can have all the razor wire in the world it still will not save them.

ON MANO

The Japanese campaign launched in 2003 has had a powerful effect. We know that Japanese customers view the SHAC web worried about the campaign against them that in 2003 they spent hundreds of thousands of pounds and many senior staff's have failed miserably and if anything have made activists worldwide even more determined to put pressure on these vile ani tracks since the start of the Japanese campaign – don't forget these companies are responsible for 20% of HLS's annual bus

SOUTHERN FOCUS: YAMANOUCHI

Yamanouchi have been chosen as a global focus for the Japanese campaign for several reasons, the main one being popular demand from various groups worldwide who want to focus their energies effectively as part of the Japanese customer campaign.

Yamanouchi's vicious experiments at HLS and purchasing of 2 day old puppies to be experimented on have always roused activists' anger and determination to highlight their sick activities throughout the campaign against HLS, and many activists felt that the pressure already brought to bear on this company globally should be built on.

Yamanouchi has a long and vicious history of dealing with HLS and paying them to murder animals on their behalf. From 1989 when Sarah Kite exposed a disgusting experiment they were doing at HLS, to Michelle Rokke's investigation in 1997 that revealed a leg-breaking experiment on 37 beagle puppies due to have their legs snapped with steel wire with no anaesthetic, right through to documentation obtained that proves their recent involvement with HLS, Yamanouchi have been close allies to the animal murderers at HLS for over 15 years

Fraud and disregard for humans
This company not only abuses animals, it also shows a gross disregard for the very human beings it claims to want to save. Yamanouchi Pharmaceutical Co failed to report to the Japanese Government 15 instances, including two deaths, of adverse reactions relating to its Gaster 10 drug. Shares in the company fell on the news in trading on the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

Exercise 3: Modus Operandi

Demonstrations, phone calls, emails, faxes and publicity stunts will be part of these campaigns. We will aim to bring the world's media spotlight shining down on these companies and ensure everyone knows exactly who they are and what they do. We call on the japanese customers to sever their links with HLS, the fraudulent testing lab with a criminal record. We would like to make it clear that SHAC is not inciting or encouraging illegal actions against Japanese customers or their employees in any shape or form. However we will not be stifled and the campaign and its supporters worldwide will exercise their right to protest legitimately and effectively and do everything within our power to highlight their disgusting, shameful record of animal cruelty and close te on a daily basis monitoring all the actions taken against their offices worldwide. Five Japanese HLS customers are so recious man hours attempting to stifle the campaigns against them by obtaining High Court injunctions. These injunctions al-murdering companies and highlight their close ties to HLS. HLS's figures have been slowed down and stopped in their ness –that means 20% of the animals brutally tortured and killed within their evil labs every year.

NORTHERN FOCUS: ASAHI GLASS

Asahi Glass is an international glass manufacturing conglomerate with a sideline specialising in fluorine-based chemicals. Several years ago, their chemical division paid HLS to do 'inhalation toxicology' experiments on rats and also six week old beagle puppies. These sick experiments caused them to be poisoned; all died, the lucky ones within 15 minutes. One dog dropped down dead from a heart attack in front of all the others. For others the suffering was much longer.

Asahi Glass have a number of sites in the UK. As part of its glass division it controls Glaverbel in Rugby and Bradley Glass in Worthing. Its chemical division own AG Fluoropolymers in Fleetwood and F2 Chemicals in Preston. F2 Chemicals were heavily involved in the HLS experiments. For years they had anonymity, hiding their dirty businesses out of sight. Now that has changed dramatically.

Last year all four sites were regularly visited by outraged activists, upsetting their cosy ignorance with noisy, informative demos. So panicked are they, that F2 Chemicals have been considering sacking staff to pay for more security guards.

Elsewhere they have been six foot high letters announcing that they are animal killers to the world, and thousands of leaflets have been distributed throughout nearby estates. Cases have been reported where ordinary people have started taking action against the company such is the dirt of Asahi Glass's name now. Protest camps were held at busy injunctions, gaining much media coverage and pushing our message further, while injunctions taken out to stop the protests have had little effect.

The promise for 2004 is that there is going to be no let up of the pressure, and that Asahi Glass will have no idea when the next public embarrassment is coming their way.

LONDON FOCUS: DAIICHI

Daiichi Pharmaceuticals who have a London office have been killing animals at HLS for many years. This Japanese customer is one of the five companies who have decided to take out an injunction against our legitimate right to protest. They have failed. The High Court have agreed that we can protest albeit under certain conditions. As a result Daiichi will now having more demonstrations than they did before the injunction. Every two weeks we will show Daiichi that we have not forgotten, we are not going away and we will not be silenced. It is very important that people support these demonstrations. Contact us with your phone number if you would like to be on the ring round list for Daiichi demos.

MIDLANDS FOCUS: SANKYO

Sankyo are another long-term Japanese HLS customer. As long as Sankyo are torturing and killing animals at HLS then they will be a priority for demonstrations by SHAC. Come and put the pressure on this long-term HLS customer who have been commissioning experiments there for the last 15 years.

If you would like to know when the demos are at Daiichi and Sankyo, please ring through your phone number to the SHAC office.

Exercise 4: How evil is your enemy?

Perhaps the most disgusting of Yamanouchi's animal-abusing activities came to light when the campaign was sent a delivery note for a mother beagle and her litter of two day old puppies from the notorious lab animal breeders Harlan to Yamanouchi's research centre in Oxford, now closed down thanks to SHAC. Just imagine the fear and confusion of that mother dog as she and her newborn puppies were packed into a travelling crate and driven across the country to end up in a cold metal cage waiting to be tortured and killed. How evil are these people, and how just that the world should know of their barbaric, inhumane activities.

When Michele Rokke worked undercover at HLS in 1997 she reported that Yamanouchi were a customer. They were due to carry out a leg-breaking experiment on 37 beagles where their legs were due to be snapped with steel wire. Michele described these dogs as ill and extremely nervous and fearful.

The HLS vet is quoted as saying: "These dogs are crap dogs. Rejects. They are not healthy dogs and should not be used and if they were used it would be a poor quality study."

An HLS worker joked about the dogs, saying "they should just break all their legs so they'll be easier to work with."

The dog pictured above was one of the 37 that was due to have her legs broken by Yamanouchi at HLS. As you take action against these companies always remember this dog's face as it shows the pure evil we are fighting against, people who will poison and kill her.

Review of t

2003 was a powerful year for SHAC and together we fought some hard battles and won some amazing victories.

After Marsh finally dumping HLS in December after a hard-fought war against them by activists worldwide there was no stopping us and we went into 2003 in fighting mode in January, knocking out 2 key HLS directors in a matter of weeks.

In January HLS also lost both companies that were taking away the bodies of the 500 animals a day they mutilate in their labs.

February saw HLS customer Eli-Lilly infiltrated and exposed and an incredible 10 day campaign against HLS's auditors Deloitte & Touche that ended with their resignation.

March kicked off with HLS customer Merial raided in the USA and 115 animals rescued, the IAT conference cancelled and 21 goats rescued from HLS's supplier in Somerset.

April saw HLS supplier Harlan raided in Germany raided with 24 dogs liberated and the biggest ever SHAC demo on World Day. CPS Fuels pulled out in June, costing HLS three quarters of a million pounds when every local company refused to deliver fuel to them and they were forced to lay down miles of piping to tap into a national fuel supply.

In July CBC, HLS's Japanese sales office, decided the world-wide pressure on them that had been building up was too much to withstand and pulled out, forcing HLS to buy them out.

International and UK media in August reported bombs going off at HLS customers Chiron and Yamanouchi in the USA and a massive blaze down in small Dole in Sussex that destroyed buildings and many lorries owned by HLS and used for importing primates.

September and October saw the supplier campaign go wild with one after another HLS supplier being targeted and pulling out.

In November HLS released their third quarter figures with Cass reporting 'softening of orders' and the evidence in black and white that the Japanese customer campaign is starting to bite hard.

The year finished off in December with HLS's goat supplier getting raided again with 21 goats, many of them pregnant, being liberated and carried to safety by activists.

Here's the roll call of victories in 2003:

14/1/03 TWO HLS DIRECTORS RESIGN
Despite being registered as directors until at least June 2003, USA director Kirby Cramer and UK non-executive director John Caldwell both resigned from HLS with immediate effect. Kirby Cramer set up the notorious animal testing company Covance, and his connections with senior management at HLS went back many years. Cramer was also instrumental in many financial deals negotiated on HLS's behalf. John Caldwell had worked for HLS since 1996 and with his contacts in the industry was a key director at HLS.

SPONSOR WEEKEND AND FUNDRAISING

The Sponsored weekend was a great success with everything going on from sponsored silences, swims, bike rides to walks, rides and vegan cooking events. We also want to thank Cathy and Steve for their wonderful support from stalls right through the year. Thanks also to everyone who has supported the campaign by standing orders, donations, stalls and fund-raising events throughout 2003– you've done a brilliant job. A special thanks to our generous donors for paying legal fees for the injunctions which enabled us to have sound, intelligent legal advice and representation, and ensured the japanese companies failed in their attempts to stifle the campaign. Your response was overwhelming. There is 5 thousand pounds still owing so if anyone else would like to contribute, please mark your envelope 'legal fund'. Thanks.
Thanks to all those who donated to SHAC when Maureen J lost her husband. xx

Save the Newchurch Guinea Pigs

Guinea pigs are the third most commonly used victim of the British vivisection industry. 70,000 guinea pigs are tortured to death inside UK labs every year. HLS use and discard an unknown amount of these sentient creatures many of which are supplied to them by Staffordshire based David Hall and Partners, one of the biggest guinea pig breeders in the country. To pledge further allegiance, David Hall and Partners also hold shares in H.L.S.

Two of the liberated guinea pigs. The Newchurch World day date is April 24th. Newchurch is in a real state and attending this demo is a must. Newchurch could really go and soon.
BE THERE. MAKE IT HAPPEN.

Conditions inside the breeding sheds of this family-run business show no respect for the families of guinea pigs exploited and abused there. Females who are treated as breeding machines are so stressed by the unnatural conditions that they frequently eat their own young. The mortality rate is so high in fact that it is a daily procedure for workers to remove the dead bodies from pens shared by the living.

Those that display hair loss, deformities or are not profitable breeders are granted an early release from the squalid conditions by "cervical dislocation", another routine job the workers may prefer to call breaking necks.

Those guinea pigs who are unfortunate enough to have survived this death camp are packed into boxes and sold to laboratories such as HLS where they are tortured and killed.

David Hall and Partners were not unfamiliar with animal rights attention before Save The Newchurch Guinea Pig Campaign was set up. Activists had not long liberated 600 guinea pigs from newly built sheds that stood on the site of their old mink fur farm, which is also rumoured to have received some action in the past.

The family were certainly not expecting a substantial and long running campaign to commence after the raid which cost them not only the 600 guinea pigs that were liberated but also the remaining thousands of unfortunates who were sadly left behind due to impossible circumstances. With the sterile status of the shed compromised the Hall family decided it would be more profitable to massacre the whole lot and did not even offer to let them go to rehoming charities.

Four years into the campaign a long list of small but vital victories has been achieved. Staff members (including one who had worked there for decades) have quit, forcing the business to shut down a third of the breeding sheds. Suppliers of materials and services necessary for the operation of the farm have pulled out. Their friends prefer to keep their distance and the Halls are no longer welcome to use various leisure facilities in their area.

The most recent blows to the business were the loss of their solicitors, followed shortly by the milk collectors, which forced them to sell their dairy herd and finally Dove fuels who until recently vowed never to bow down to animal rights pressure.

Although the Halls continue to profit from the abuse of sheep and a beef herd, the poultry farm previously owned by the Halls is now closed, presumably to afford more staff to the now struggling guinea pig farm.

Step by step the Halls Empire is falling and if Dove Fuels' previous display of commitment is an example of the only hope they cling to then it won't be long now until they accept defeat.

Let's make it sooner rather than later. For the animals, get involved now.

SPEAC - Stop Primate Experiments at Cambridge

On 21st November we heard the long awaited but predictable news from John Prescott the deputy Prime Minister that the Government had granted planning permission to Cambridge university to build Europe's largest primate lab on the outskirts of the city.

This undemocratic and shameful decision flew in the face of the independent inspector's report which in its conclusion stated that 'Cambridge University had failed to show that the proposed primate lab was in the national interest'. It has been a continuing theme of this struggle that elements within this Government want to turn the U.K. into the vivisection capital of Europe and are prepared to ignore public opinion, scientific argument and ethics to achieve their disgusting aims.

SPEAC responded to Prescott's announcement with an emergency demo. Activists descended on the colleges and caused serious disruption to lectures and the daily routine of university life. Since then SPEAC has followed up with successful 'days of action' which have continued to give the university major headaches and have met with violence from an employee on a recent demo.

After the Government announcement that the university had been granted planning permission a press conference was quickly cobbled together by the university and a mealy-mouthed statement followed. What Prof Minson told the media sums up the position we now find ourselves in. He stated "it is conceivable this lab will not be built". This statement was not because the university had suddenly woke up to the scientific folly of deliberately brain damaging monkeys but to the spiralling cost of building this primate torture centre. The original estimate of £24 MILLION has now risen to £33 million and continues to grow. As far as SPEAC goes and the campaign to stop this monstrous lab from becoming a reality, the message is clear and simple, we will continue to take the fight to Cambridge university and anyone else who is contemplating involvement in this underhanded and evil project.

ARC - Animal Rights Coalition

The next ARC meeting will be on Sunday 25 January at the Camp Hill Community Centre, Dayrell Rd, Camp Hill, Northampton. The community centre is situated in the grounds of Hunsbury school and can be reached via the A45 Danes Camp Way ring road.
Guest speaker at the meeting will be Daniel from Sweden. Daniel is a very prominent figure in the animal liberation movement in Sweden. All welcome.

SHAC TACTICS

Mel Broughton has been involved in the movement for 25 years and still has lots to offer. As one of the leading lights in the newly-formed SPEAC campaign Mel is busy putting all his experience to good use. Mel was sentenced to 4 years for possession of incendiary devices and was released only relatively recently. Mel didn't come out of prison with the attitude of 'I've done my bit now, I'm off.' Mel was a close friend of Barry Horne and he knows as Barry knew there is no 'I've done my bit.' What does that mean to animals dying and suffering now? Nothing! That's why Mel is still up at the front fighting, arguing and moving the movement forward towards victory which means no labs, no animal farms, no circuses or zoos, no slaughterhouses and NO ANIMAL SUFFERING...Only then can we all go and retire and go mountain climbing in Scotland and not a second before..

The animal rights movement has over the last two decades used a variety of tactics to highlight animal abuse and to make it impossible for those profiting from such abuse to continue.

Whilst we have, as a movement, been successful in knocking out individual animal abusers, it is only in recent times that we have witnessed a campaign bring multi national animal abuse to its knees.

SHAC have opened a new and dynamic chapter in the animal liberation struggle and demonstrated that no matter how big they are they cannot escape activsts who have made it their business to understand 'the business' of corporate animal abuse. It has always been understood amongst a/r campaigners that profits drive the animal killers but SHAC took that premise and turned it into a truly groundbreaking campaign strategy.

Right from the start of the fight against HLS, SHAC sought to take the fight to the doors of those who bankroll suffering and death and let it be known there was no hiding place. Despite the hidden hand of Government aiding and encouraging banks and financial institutions to bail HLS out, SHAC moved to isolate and target such institutions with a variety of tactics. From the 'back down' of the Royal Bank Of Scotland to the Japanese customers campaign, SHAC have demonstrated that a handful of determined activists can impact on the 'business' of animal abuse in a serious way.

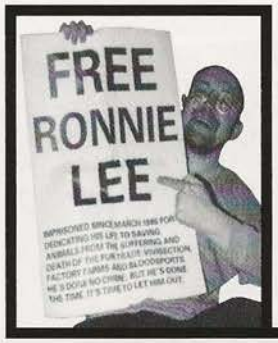

What SHAC have also achieved is the goal of giving rise to an international campaign which has seen a/r campaigners on the doorsteps of companies as far apart as America and Japan. Companies like HLS depend on suppliers and customers to make their 'dirty' profits and those who deal with them are not keen to have their businesses or comfy homes subject to demo's and unwanted press attention which could impact on other areas of their business interests. At the end of the day who really wants to associated with a bunch of animal torturers.

SHAC activists have shown how it is possible to cut off the lifeblood that keeps companies like HLS alive and we all know that if it weren't for Government involvement this animal death camp would be be no more. SHAC have shown that their tactics are not only highly effective but interchangable and as such able to withstand all that their enemies can throw at them.

Prison sentences, injuctions and harrassment of activists have all been thrown at SHAC but none of this has stopped the methodical dismantling of an animal abuse institution.

There can only be one outcome to this war and that is the destruction of HLS. When it

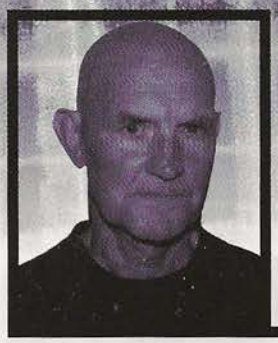

Ronnie Lee..What can I say about him? Well I will start by saying that he is laughing in the picture but I don't think many animal abusers he has come into contact with are laughing. Ronnie has served 3 prison sentences, one for 18 months for destroying sealers' boats in the Wash in the late seventies..yes they really were still seal hunting then. Ronnie was then sentenced to 3 years for amongst other things trying to burn down Hoeschst's new animal lab in Milton Keynes...Lastly Ronnie was sentenced to 10 years in jail for his part in the devastation of the Fur Industry in the mid to late eighties. This is why none of the major department stores today still stock fur... there are many lessons to be learnt from that campaign. All in all Ronnie has been a bit of a naughty boy... haven't you Ronnie?

Four years after the start of the SHAC campaign, HLS is still operating. Some would say this means that SHAC has been a failure. That couldn't be further from the truth.
There is no doubt that SHAC will eventually bring about the closure of HLS. This will be a great victory, but it will not be the only triumph of the SHAC campaign.
The story of SHAC has been one of continual victory over those who support and take part in the vivisection industry. One by one, the props which support the HLS animal torture machine are being relentlessly knocked away.
And what of the hidden victories? The numbers of researchers and potential researchers who have doubtless shied away from animal experimentation, for fear of being targetted by SHAC or by other campaigns which have adopted SHAC's highly effective tactics. It would be impossible to estimate the number of animals spared from torture because of this, but it could easily be many thousands.

I have been around for long enough in the animal liberation movement to know a good thing when I see it, and there is no doubt in my mind that the contribution made by SHAC to the struggle for animal liberation has been immense.
Now, more than ever, is the time to support the SHAC campaign, to be part of the continual triumph over the monsters who torture innocent creatures.
Ronnie Lee

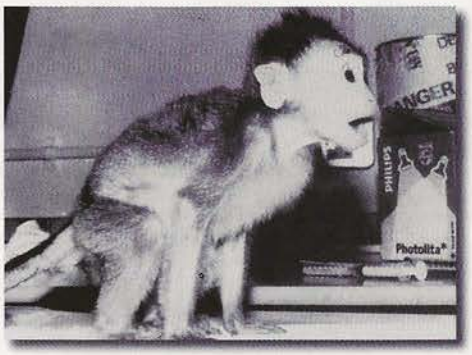

...how and why

Mike Nunn is one of the founding members of the South East Liberation League(SEALL). In 1984 this group revolutionised the movement and inspired people to reach new heights and goals. They carried out a series of daring daylight actions, raiding one of the most prestigous labs in the country namely the Royal College of Surgeons in Downe, Kent where video footage, slides and documents were taken that proved the RCS were using stolen family pets for experiments. The picture below was a picture taken from the RCS, the word tattooed by the vivisectors on the small monkey's head was CRAP. They also raided a lab run by a company called BIOS in Surrey. Just as the police were arriving at the front, activists disapeared into the woods at the back with documents and 10 beagles, never to be seen again...

It would safely fill this complete journal to adequately comment upon the numerous diversions of the SHAC campaign in detail. Therefore, I propose examining just one aspect of the operation - If you consider the reverberations that, still yet, are echoing, around Britain and elsewhere, within any of the companies and fellow associates, who have stopped supplying anything at all to HLS, as a direct result of the influences exercised by this serial protest, then, in assessing the level of the crusade's progress to date, the logical conclusion must be that SHAC have already excelled themselves as trail blazers in the fight to establish proper rights for animals, setting a high-wire template for others to aspire to.

Furthermore, with news spreading, as it surely will, to all the hundreds of thousands of other suppliers of goods or services, throughout the country and beyond, regarding the considerable problems encountered when dealing with HLS - what then might be the response of any of these establishments - should they be approached, for whatever reason, by any animal abuser - be they factory farm, fox hunt, vivisection laboratory or whatever .....? Common sense tells us that with profit their sole motivation, by far the majority of these commercial institutions simply would not risk being subjected to an examination by animal rightists - Whilst previous animal rights campaigns may have incorporated protestations to organisations linked to the target abuser; comparatively, SHAC, in quite legitimately exploiting the process far beyond any previous ambitions and expectations, have developed this arm of their intent to something approaching the level of a 'fine art'.

In perusing the many and varied aspects of the overall protest, as currently exercised, it is difficult to find any feature at all worthy of criticism in depth. I also find it equally arduous to offer any constructive suggestion that may improve the quality or the diversity of the campaign.

Nancy Phipps will read this, but Nancy you could never know just what an inspiration you have been and not just in the U.K but all around the world. Nancy as you will all know tragically lost her daughter Jill under the wheels of a lorry carrying calves for live export for the murdering bastard Barrett - Jolly, who is now doing over 20 years inside for drug importation. ROT IN HELL YOU BASTARD. Nancy has been an activist for well over 20 years and after the death of her daughter most people would have had enough to deal with their grief but Nancy knows that animals are still dying and she is still fighting as hard as ever...

When I look back over the last twenty years since I first became in the Animal rights movement I can't believe how much we have achieved, and how much our impression of our movement has changed and evolved over the years.

In those far-off times very little was known about the callous cruelty that we know now is inflicted on the beautiful creatures of our planet, but thanks to the birth of the ALF or The Band of Mercy as it was first called, the obscene photos of the smoking beagles were first shown to the horrified world. The sight of those beautiful docile dogs being locked in a machine and forced to inhale the vile smoke down their throat says it all, as do the channel 4 pictures that were shown on screen of puppies being kicked and punched by thugs employed by the wonderful Huntingdon Life Sciences which is kept going by government money (our taxes by the way). Do any of us even dare to think of the obscenities that go on behind the scenes that we don't see.

I well remember going on my first national demonstration at Huntingdon. A boiling hot day it turned out to be. Speeches were made nearby on the back of a lorry, but I didn't hear them. I just remember staring at this building and the awful pictures it conveyed. It was and still is the epitome of pure evil, and I remember the numbing horror which engulfed me. That never in a million years could we ever hope to see this fortress close. It was too big. Those huge steel fences with barbed wire on top. The thugs roaming about going by the name of security men. It was too big, too powerful. All the demos in the world wouldn't make a scrap of difference. A day seared into my memory for who could look at such a place and not feel the utter pain and terror of the animals inside and I remember the feeling of hatred I felt that I could live in a society that allowed such atrocities to happen.

However miracles do happen. A group called SHAC came along with new formats, new ideas. We couldn't storm the fortress but we could take it apart brick by brick, and the magic word is TARGETTING. These past years have seen the end of Hillgrove a place that had been breeding kittens for years for the vivisection industry, Consort went, a place that bred beagle puppies for vivisection, Shamrock farm went, they had been going for years breeding monkeys, Regal rabbits caved in straight away. Newchurch which breeds guinea pigs is on its knees.

Nobody can withstand the onslaught of people who are fighting for justice. Not for themselves but for the helpless vulnerable creatures that politicians are happy to ignore. No votes in it for them. But I wonder at the end of the day how many human votes they've lost by their total callous indifference to what in a civilised society is totally morally and ethically wrong.

HLS AND THE JAPANESE INJUNCTIONS – HOW THEY ARE A FAILURE

This year HLS and their Japanese customers have attempted to use civil law to crush the right to protest. They have used the lawyer Timothy Lawson-Cruttenden who has also obtained similar injunctions in the past for Hillgrove cat farm, the BFSS, Harrison a mink farmer, Zwirns fur shop and other animal abusers – they were so effective that Hillgrove, Harrison's mink farm and Zwirn's fur shop all closed down and they didn't make a blind bit of difference to the campaigns against them. The japanese customers have been attempting to use the Harassment Act, designed to stop stalkers, to actually outlaw the right to protest!

Much store has been put on these civil court measures, with the belief that these measures will succeed where their own efforts and those of the police have so spectacularly failed in thwarting the relentless campaign to close down HLS. They are desperate measures, and it is a sign of their importance that each company is willing to spend up to £80,000 getting these injunctions.

HLS and the Japanese companies wanted to ban any form of demonstrating against their companies and their employees, an outrageous attempt at suppressing peoples' rights to demonstrate. They all failed on getting demonstrations at the companies banned, despite their lawyer's best efforts. Actions aimed at individual employees were prohibited, but then targeting of individual employees is not advocated by SHAC anyway.

The demos and other actions continue to impact despite all the regulations. The sight of sour faces and managing directors jumping up and down in helpless fury only encourage us back. Lawson-Cruttenden's promises are looking increasingly hollow, but this is their last big tactic they can use against us. When the injunctions fail, they will have nothing left to fight us with.

We are going to be bold and say that the injunctions have spurred the campaigns against HLS on by inspiring activists to seek out new avenues of protest and engendering in people a fierce determination to stand up for their rights to protest. They have not squashed protest, but simply made activists more determined and more inventive. All round the UK we are seeing activists fighting for their right to highlight these companies' involvement in animal cruelty and carry on the campaigns against them.

They may have thought that taking out civil injunctions against activists would kill the campaign against HLS; the reality is that it is becoming an expensive mistake with no sign of anyone giving up and the pressure increasing day by day against HLS and those who are their partners in the crimes of horrific animal cruelty and putting products on the market that poison, maim and kill human beings.

If you have any questions about the injunctions, feel free to call the office anytime. Remember above all that no-one can stop you demonstrating against these companies involved in the most horrific animal cruelty imaginable and in a fraudulent industry whose purpose is to make maximum profit out of human suffering.
