Huntingdon Life Sciences

Working for a better future

EXPOSED How many more times?

This article printed in the Observer on 22nd February 2004 was good but still doesn't portray the true horror of what takes place behind the sound-proofed walls of HLS labs every single day.

It was my gruelling task to study the documents detailing these "experiments" that were leaked to us by a sympathetic scientist. These are some of my immediate thoughts that I wrote down at the time. Thoughts that will be with me forever.

"1187, as they called him, is dead now. He was killed by HLS staff and he never stood a chance. Before they killed him they put him through hell. Ever since I read the so-called study it has been impossible to hold back the tears of anger and frustration at times. The anger and frustration is there because this is a past event that we were unable to prevent and those dogs never knew that somebody does care and is working so hard to put an end to their suffering.

There were 6 dogs used in this senseless experiment. They all suffered equally but for some reason my eyes were always drawn to the notes on 1187. All of the dogs were male and between 7 and 8 months old. Bantin and Kingman sold them to HLS for torture and made a profit. I don't use the word torture lightly or for emotive reasons. I use it as it is defined in the English dictionary. No other word comes close to describing what they put those animals through at HLS.

The Japanese company Daikin Industries Ltd. commissioned HLS to do the experiments which in simple terms meant strapping the dogs into slings to keep them still and then forcing them to inhale HCFCs (the gases that come from fridges) via tubes and a face mask to see if they had a heart attack (cardiac sensitisation). This was done day after day with increasing doses.

Below is an account of 1187's suffering at the hands of HLS. The people who casually stood by and watched him struggle and fight for his breath and his life and took notes watched until he had no fight left in his little body. Just 8 months old remember. Read on and you will see why when we say these people are monsters we mean it from the bottom of our hearts. This is why we will never walk away.

IN THEIR WORDS
The study started on 31st December 2002 and finished on 8th April 2003. The exposure sessions were carried out in the Department of Dog Toxicology (Building J24, Room 1005).

Appropriate areas on the dog's limbs were shaved and electrode gel applied. During these tests the dogs were injected with adrenaline also.

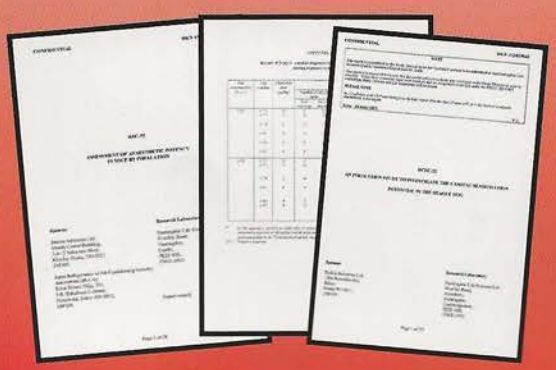

At least one calendar day was planned between each exposure session to allow the dogs to recover.
Results of Stage 1 – Individual responses to adrenaline alone
No description for 1187 but others were described as vocalising, trembling, nervous and struggling.

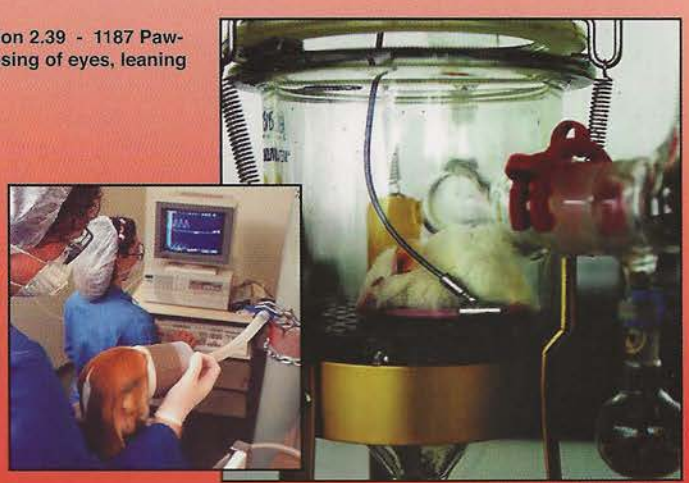

Exposure then started with the gas at increasing concentrations.

Gas concentration 2.39 - 1187 Pawing of mask, closing of eyes, leaning in sling

Gas concentration 4.05 - 1187 Closing of eyes, drooping of head, slow deep breathing, staggering in sling, semi-consciousness. (1179 had severe head tremors at this dose.)
Gas concentration 4.46 - 1187 Pulling back, drooping of head, slight forelimb tremors, unresponsive to stimuli. Exposure stopped at 14 minutes.
Gas concentration 5.16 - 1187 Slightly pulling back in sling, drooping of head, leaning in sling, closing of eyes, semi-consciousness. Unresponsive to external stimuli, vocalisation on mask removal. Exposure stopped at 13 minutes.
Gas concentration 5.93 - 1187 Pulling back, closing of eyes, slight drooping of head, lying in sling, slow breathing, slight tremors, pawing of mask, staggering in sling, swaying in sling, eyes unfocused, unresponsiveness to external stimuli. Exposure stopped at 12 minutes. Dog appeared subdued after removal of mask.
At this dose other dogs described with whole body tremors, head shaking, severe agitation, slow deep breathing and pawing of mask etc.
Gas Concentration 6.89 – At this stage 1187 had difficulty keeping his head up and then became unconscious.

There is no doubt in my mind that the people who did this are sick and twisted individuals. They must be stopped.

The companies listed here are some of HLS's main japanese customers. They carry out the same type of experiments at HLS. Please write to them and ring and tell them what you think about them funding sick experiments.

SHAC Goes mobile

A small group of activists headed off to 4 targets today to bring home the message that suppliers and customers alike are tainted with the blood of animals murdered in HLS.

First stop was BOC Edwards in Crawley, who supply gases to HLS to kill the animals no longer deemed any use for experiments. We marched up to the side door, expecting it to be firmly locked and nearly fell in when it opened. Good security here then. We were able to get into the canteen, all the offices and the factory floor with just one office staff member there who said "How did you get in?" At the far end of the firm's buildings a security man had his cctv screens on, covering every area except where we were! Very efficient. As we headed off 2 riot vans passed us but we can't imagine anyone at BOC had called them....

On to target 2 which was Novo Nordisk, a customer of HLS, also in Crawley. We put up posters and leafleted cars and buildings in the area so that this company will know just exactly who we are and that doing business with HLS is unacceptable.

Into our cars and on to target 3 just outside Horsham - Travis Perkins, suppliers of building materials to HLS. There were staff from other firms around so we told them why we were there then covered every available space around this firm's site with posters and leaflets, leaving the message loud and clear - stop doing business with animal abusers!

A large group of us paid visits to Huntingdon suppliers on Saturday. We went to Eyre and Elliston, a nationwide electrical firm who have since dumped HLS. Travis Perkins building supplies were next and in we went with megaphones informing their customers who they do business with. They have now made a statement and suspended HLS's account immediately after our demo. This would not have been the case if we were marching round a town 80 miles away.

We then went to P J Turner Roofing Ltd, and then on to Terry's Private Hire at Wyton, situated in a crumbly little shack. Terry's have also since pulled out of HLS.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE

Other people went on to finish the successful day elsewhere, whilst the Cambs police even with their helicopter could not keep up with the speed at which we work.

Interfauna was also paid a visit and told how much we hate them. They now have Labrador puppies right by the front gate. This is a vile company. Their day will come.

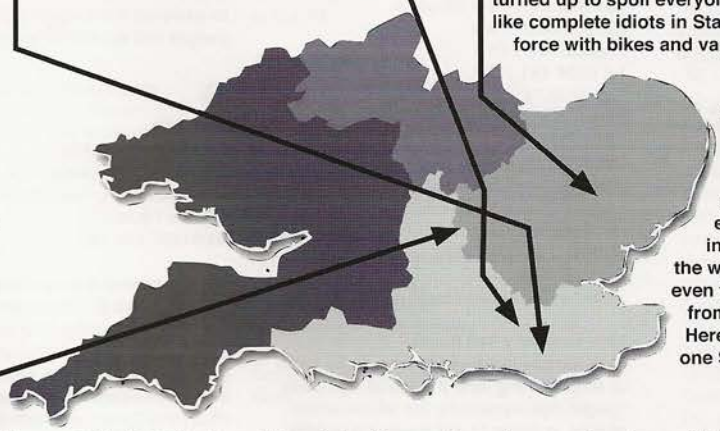

WHY WE WENT MOBILE

The demo on Saturday went mobile for 2 reasons: the police changed the route of the march at the last minute to one that bypassed the town centre and went down a dual carriageway, and Surrey police on Valentine's day held sabs back while a fox was dug out and killed in front of them. If you attack and try to trick any part of the movement we all fight back together.

SURREY

Did you have a good time yesterday? We did, we teamed up with London, got a police escort, but while on the M25 a few cars in front had a crash, so as the police were behind us they had to sort that out.

We avoided Eli Lilly, where we had heard that the police had turned up to spoil everyone's fun after being made to look like complete idiots in Staines, ready and waiting in full force with bikes and vans full of coppers for the march that never was!

We did some customer demos and a home visit, which was made much more effective when at the end we had 3 riot vans turn up on it, and the police then kindly escorted us to London and waited in the car park while we went into the warm to have a nice drink. We even finished the day by saving a dog from being run over by another car. Here's to more mobile demos! Nice one SHAC!

BUCKS/MIDDLESEX

We were one of the 5 breakaway groups from the Staines march. Over 40 of us met up a couple of miles away from HLS supplier Amersham PLC. We have warned them that we would be back in force and so we were on Saturday. There were no police with us as we drove up to Amersham's plush offices. Soon we had put all the banners up and two of us got busy on the megaphones as the police started to arrive looking a little bemused. This was obviously completely unexpected. The support from locals is growing with lots of them tooting their horns and waving and others coming over to chat and take leaflets. Amersham PLC's image is being seriously damaged locally because of their dealings with HLS.

We played the tape of the beagles' terrified screams at the hands of Huntingdon workers at full volume and explained to the public nearby that this is what Amersham support and pay for. We told everyone that Amersham stands shoulder to shoulder with a company that employs convicted sex offenders and whose staff pretend to have sex with the animals and then shake them and punch them repeatedly in the head.

Next on our list was HLS customer Schering-Plough on Breakspeare Road South, Ickenham, Middlesex. It looks like this disgusting company keeps its own animals there for experimentation. Again lots of support from locals and passing traffic and by now our numbers had swelled to about 60.

Last visit was to a business called Sandown Scientific at 25 Oldfield Road, Hampton, Middlesex. These monsters import the necropsy tables used by the sick deviants at HLS and other labs to dismember the innocent animals they have put through such agony. Sometimes when the animals reach these tables they are still conscious. Who could ever forget Michelle's eyewitness account of seeing that beagle puppy throwing her head back and howling as the scalpel sliced open her little body, and the video footage of that little monkey's tiny fist clenching and unclenching and his face grimacing as HLS staff tore his precious body apart?

Of course the (terribly unfit) police officers came running into the garden quoting section 42 and threatening to arrest us if we didn't leave. We had done our job for now so we left slowly playing the beagle tape and leafleting and talking to the neighbours who seemed horrified to have animal abusers living in their midst. Being involved in animal cruelty isn't something these people like to advertise. Well your dirty secret is out now. Everyone agreed that this was far better than being herded along by police and being prevented from marching through the town centre even and to top it all being told to keep the noise down! When you are as angry and determined as we are those kinds of restrictions and attempts to stifle us just won't work. Well done to every one who helped make this day a success. If you didn't manage to join up with us make sure you let us know your mobile number in advance next time. We can be unpredictable at times but so effective as a result.

ACTION

The companies listed below all deal with Huntingdon Life Sciences even though they have been made aware of the shocking animal cruelty and unscientific practices occuring there. Contact them by phone, fax or email and explain to them exactly what sort of company Huntingdon Life Sciences are and ask them to sever their contracts with this disgusting company. You can also organise demonstrations at their offices to highlight these companies' involvement in animal cruelty. Please check in with the campaign to find out which supliers have made a compassionate choice and pulled out of dealing with HLS. Remember that a lot of staff are sympathetic to the campaign in these companies. Important: please note that SHAC advocates peaceful protests and polite communications to these companies only and that these details are published for that purpose.

How convenient - they are just up the road from the animal killers but when asked to stop working with HLS SHAC was told that 'the animal cruelty was years ago', even though we told the callous human being who works there about dogs being gassed to death inside HLS in December 2003 for HFC's that were banned 15 years ago. She also said 'everybody's got a choice' and that they are quite happy working with HLS and don't care what they do. The animals don't have a choice about whether they get poisoned and killed though, do they?

The rise and fall of PPL

All of you will have heard of Dolly the sheep but how many I wonder will have heard of PPL Therapeutics? Not many I would have thought. PPL Therapeutics were the company set up to harness the technology behind the cloning of Dolly. The main players in PPL were Ian Wilmut (top left) and Ron James (below left). When PPL introduced Dolly to press ranks from all over the world they stood on the edge of a tidal wave of vicious animal cloning. PPL was valued at £500 million and they had the world at their feet.

Many of our enemies proclaimed Dolly showed that animal experiments worked. Well, that was then and this is now. Dolly aged prematurely and became crippled with athritis at an early age and was killed. All the early promises and dreams were starting to come unstuck. PPL like most biotechs in the UK were and are living on promises that were failing to materialise. PPL had by this point simply run out of cash and went around the City of London frantically trying to raise more than £20 million. No money was forthcoming, the dream was over and the lies of vivisection had been uncovered once again.

In December and January all the stock at PPL was labelled, lotted and sold at public auction. Of course SHAC was on hand to photograph the happy occasion hence the photos on the right. What an amazing sight to see PPL washed up and expensive equipment sold for a fraction of the cost. A security guard tried to stop us filming but we promised we would wipe the pictures later. Yes dear of course we will. Ha! Ha!

Suppliers roundup

The Suppliers Campaign was launched in 2003 and succeeded in persuading 33 companies to sever their business links with HLS last year. This year it has got off to an incredible start with 24 suppliers going so far in just two and a half months. The suppliers campaign is an excellent opportunity to not only put pressure on HLS but also to highlight the vivisection industry and bring the cruelty and scientific invalidity of animal experiments to the attention of many different sectors of industry, often with very positive results.

Sunlight Laundry not only stopped working for HLS, but also introduced a ban on working for any animal testing lab after coming under pressure from their workers' union. SHAC has been heartened by the reaction from many companies who, upon receiving material relating to HLS and the cruelty they have been caught out for, say they want nothing more to do with them.

The Suppliers campaign has seen local groups really come into their own, putting pressure on local offices of national firms and individual suppliers up and down the country, and there has been loads of demos nationwide. From Sussex to London, Surrey to Cambridgeshire, Bristol to Liverpool, Manchester to Leeds, Dorset to Essex and everywhere in between there is no escape for companies who think they can drive in and out of the gates of hell and get away with it. A special mention must go to 14 year old Luke from Leeds who has been visiting various suppliers in his monkey suit and persuading them to pull out!

Last night (Tuesday) was the biggest catering industry get together of the year, BallArena, Excel Centre, Docklands. What better opportunity to remind those who would profit from torture & abuse at HLS that it's very bad for business to do so.

With hundreds of guests from the UK's biggest catering companies waiting in the huge reception hall all in dinner suits and ball gowns (maybe we should have these on the merchandise list) we thought it was Christmas. Activists started handing out leaflets letting everyone know about Aramark's involvement with HLS.

Then it was onto the megaphones. Several minutes of the beagle tape were played, then sirens, you get the picture, certainly everyone there did! Heavy handed security guards just added to the spectacle with their vain attempts to silence us (they didn't).

What a commotion it all caused, and just because of Aramark - do you feel a little embarrassed and ashamed Aramark? More surprises are coming your way so long as you deal with HLS!

News in brief

ALF ACTIONS RISE

American magazine Biteback reported in early March 2004 that since the Japanese injunctions were taken out against SHAC ALF actions against these companies has risen by a staggering 500% source: www.directaction.info

BAYER DIRECTOR RESIGNS

SHAC has received the following:
"This letter is to certify that with effect from 31st January 2004, Mr Michael Gerard O' Brien of 9 Boleyns Close, Queens Park, Billericay, Essex CM12 0YZ has:

1. resigned his position as director of Bayer CropScience Limited:
2. resigned from his employment with Bayer CropScience Limited; and no longer has employment or consultancy relationships with any part of the Bayer Group in any part of the world.

MIZUHO LOSING CUSTOMERS

SHAC have received several letters from account holders at Mizuho bank who have several large shareholdings at Japanese customers of Huntingdon with one quoted as saying:
"In disgust at Mizuho's involvement with HLS, I am certainly not the first Mizuho customer to close their account and I certainly won't be the last."

COMPUTER GAME ABOUT LABS

Video game makers Eidos famous for creating the computer character Laura Croft have released a game called Whiplash where players are encouraged to "demolish everything in the company from computers and test equipment to soda machines, plants and treadmills. Break it all and you'll drive the evil corporation into bankruptcy."

ASAHI GLASS DIRECTOR FLEES TO JAPAN

Mr Sagaguchi of ACT Tech in Northampton has had enough and gone back to Japan.

Yamanouchi speech invaded

When will Yamanouchi learn that we will find out which conferences they are attending and we will turn up too. Our sources informed us that a certain Dr. John Bolodeoku from Yamanouchi Europe was speaking at an event called Clinical Trials in Europe 2004-2005 at the Commonwealth Institute in London. Of course we had to be there.

We knew he was due to speak at 12.50pm so 2 of us went in early to check the place out. The receptionist showed us around and took us to the conference room itself. We left and waited in a nearby park. While we bided our time a friendly police officer came over and asked what we were doing. She must have been suspicious of our 8 foot banner resting on the park bench beside us! Anyway she strolled off satisfied that we weren't going to cause any trouble.

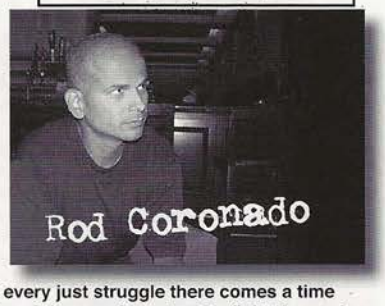

We timed our entrance down to the last minute. We wanted him to be about 5 minutes into his talk. Only three of us managed to access the building but it was enough! We raced up the stairs and burst into the conference room.

Every one of them looked stunned but none more so than Dr Bolodeoku himself. There was complete silence for a few seconds and then we were off and there was no stopping us. We shouted and played a tape recording of the beagles screaming inside HLS. Everyone was given a Yamanouchi leaflet and they all read it.

We then continued to demonstrate right outside the window where Dr. Bolodeoku was trying to speak. There was massive support from the public passing by on the busy street outside. One man said that they should all be shot which was a little drastic but he was very angry with Yamanouchi.

Yamanouchi were told via the megaphone that we would find them wherever they are and that breaking beagles legs and experimenting on 2 day old pups would not be tolerated. It is about time Yamanouchi woke up to the fact that we are not going to get off their backs until they sever their ties with HLS for good.

Your shout this issue

In every just struggle there comes a time when it is more important to fight than gain sympathy. A resistance movement is only as strong as its ability to strike back without fear. The struggle for animal liberation will not be won legislatively where it is corralled and co-opted, but financially in the ledger books of the businesses who deal in animal abuse. It is for profit not popularity that these institutions exist and only when they can no longer be profitable will they cease to exist.

The campaign against Huntington Life Sciences can best be described as a challenge and obstacle for the animal liberation struggle. With the history of every social change struggle as evidence, it is not through passive civil obedience and disobedience that society ushers in change, it is when there becomes such rage against injustice that the people act against it. For the animals, that time has come. What remains to be seen is whether it will be us alone against the gates and fences of the torture chambers and us alone in the prison cells.

No struggle can be won without such sacrifices though, as history again tells us. Too often we fail to recognize that our society survives on violence, thinking we can change its very nature. The struggle for animals and the entire natural world depends on campaigns like SHAC which strike at the very heart of the abusers. To be a true animal rights activist we must care more about the opinions of our constituents the animals, and less about the words of those who oppress them.

One things for sure, as long as the society we live in sanctions the torture of sentient beings, there must be those willing to represent and fight for them. We know how to bring them down, we've done it before and we will do it again. At a time like now, the animal nations need more guerrilla strategists and less philosophical reformists.

50 Activists march on Yamanouchi in Italy

On Friday the 13th a march against Yamanouchi and HLS has been held in the small town of Carugate, Italy, where Yamanouchi has a processing plant and a research centre.

Fifty protesters gathered to show their disgust against HLS and to inform about the horrors that Yamanouchi pays for. The protesters met in the town centre with a literature table and photo panels of vivisection labs, trying to talk with the people living in this small town. Unfortunately the big police presence, with 20 riot cops surrounding us, prevented many passers-by from stopping and seeing the photo panels.

The march towards Yamanouchi has been very noisy, with almost 10 megaphones blaring, and has been something highly unusual for such a small town. Leaflets were given and most people supported the demo.

A lot of police escorted the march, and arriving at the Yamanouchi factory we saw more riot vans waiting for us.

They had decided not to allow the demo to arrive near the buildings, thus lining in the street 100 metres before the crossroad towards Yamanouchi.

The protesters felt angry for this, being kept far, unable to see the building and to be heard by the workers. Soon they began chanting "Forward! Forward!" and the police agreed to arrive at the crossroad.

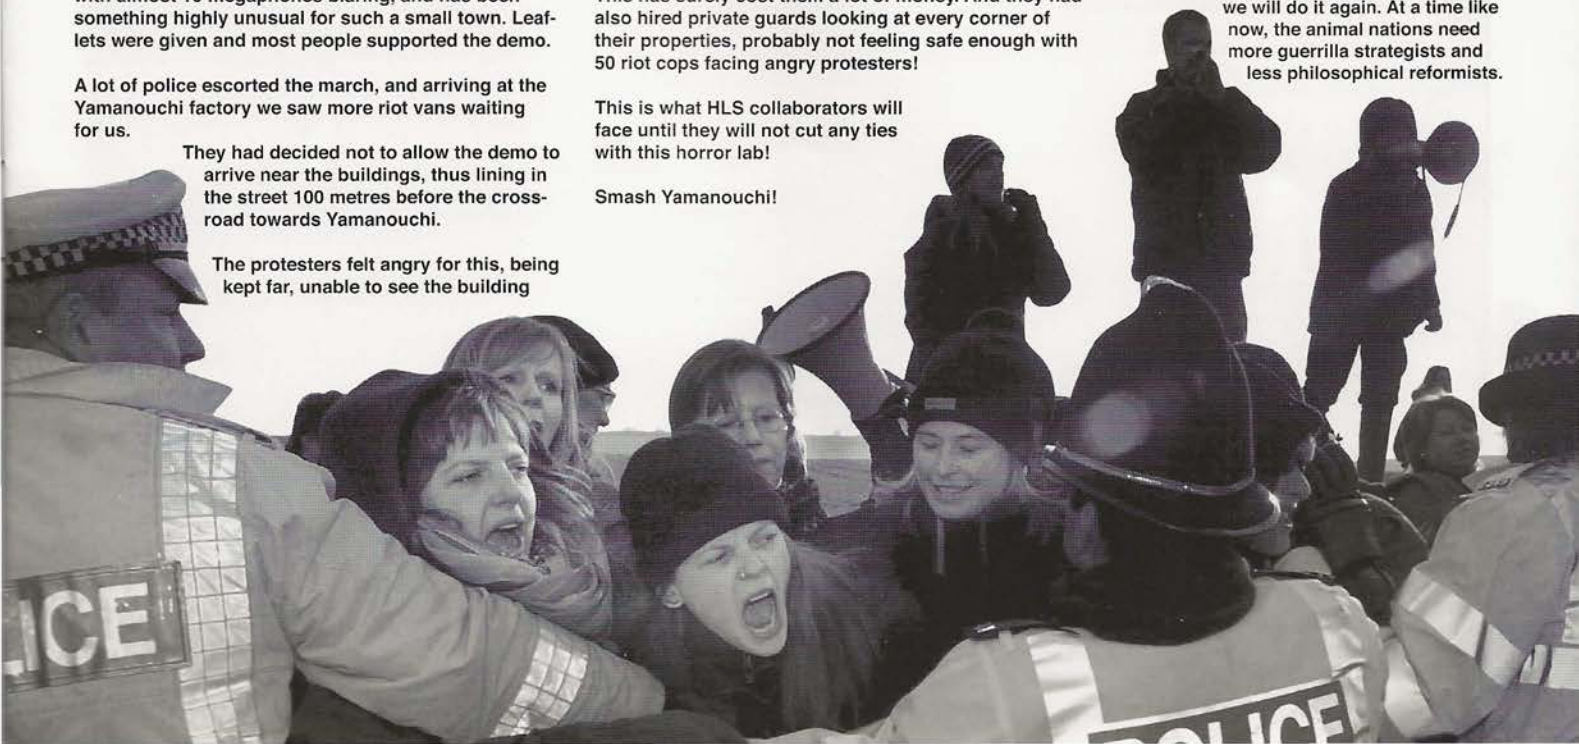

Then protesters took to the grass near one of the Yamanouchi buildings and a lot of noise was filling the air, making it clear that it will continue until they have ties with HLS.

For two hours the protest continued, with a sound system and leafleting to workers of nearby companies, but no-one ever came out of the Yamanouchi buildings. The storage centre on one side of the road was closed.

This has surely cost them a lot of money. And they had also hired private guards looking at every corner of their properties, probably not feeling safe enough with 50 riot cops facing angry protesters!

This is what HLS collaborators will face until they will not cut any ties with this horror lab!

Smash Yamanouchi!

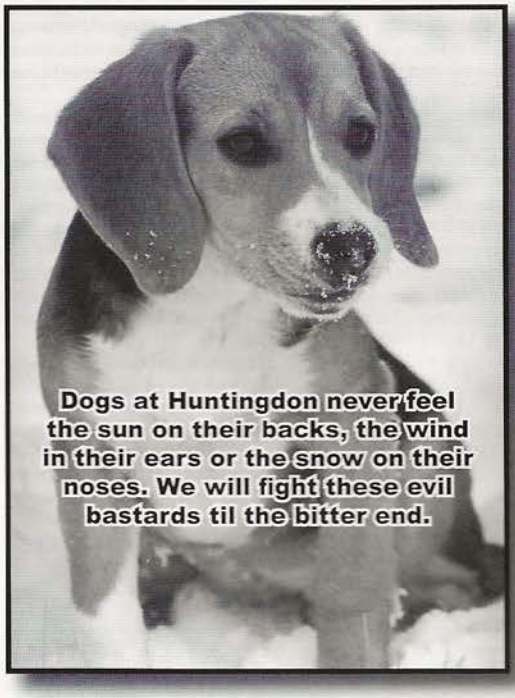

WORLD DAY is your day

Whatever you do don't miss World day for Laboratory Animals this year. The rally and demonstration will take place in Cambridge on Saturday April 17th meeting on Parker's Piece at 12 noon.

It is hard to believe that a whole year has gone by since the last World Day. Time just seems to fly by when we are all smashing Europe's largest animal testing company. By contrast time must pass agonisingly slowly for the animals in the laboratories. Throughout the year you are all attacking HLS and other animal murderers in your own way, individually and sometimes in small groups. This is the opportunity for all of us to get together in one great public show of strength, a united force speaking out for every single one of those animals we are fighting for.

What we need you to do now is:-
1. Communicate with us. Ring for transport details NOW. If there isn't any in your area then organise something.
2.Put up World Day posters. We've got thousands of them but we need you to put them up.
3. Raise funds to help us to pay for all the coaches.
4. Above all else make sure you are there on the day. No excuses. Let's shock HLS and the whole vivisection industry with a massive turn out.

Outspoken trauma surgeon from the USA Jerry Vlasak will be speaking on World Day, as will Mel Broughton, Mike Nunn, 14 year old activist Luke and a special mystery guest. There will be stalls from loads of different campaigns and cruelty-free goods on sale.

Below is an extract from Michele's diary. She worked undercover at HLS's laboratories in New Jersey for 8 months.

"I can't help but picture my favourites when I see a beagle running in the park. I see their sad faces when I close my eyes. I wonder what Spud, Joey, The Major and Ellie would be like, running through the grass and being held and loved, instead of held down and hurt.

When I see the beagle in the park roll on her back, the image that won't leave my head is of a beagle in the necropsy room throwing her head back and screaming as a knife entered her, slitting her throat."

I met Michele and she is full of admiration for everyone who is fighting for lab animals. She broke down in tears and said not to let these animals' deaths and her undercover work be in vain. She did a job that most people admit they could not do and she will carry those images with her for the rest of her life. What she saw still continues today.

IF ANYTHING YOU HAVE JUST READ MAKES YOU FEEL SAD, ANGRY OR LIKE YOU JUST HAVE TO DO SOMETHING THEN BE THERE ON WORLD DAY. NOBODY ELSE IS GOING TO HELP THEM. IT'S UP TO YOU.

THE POWER OF REGIONAL GROUPS

The last six months have seen the formation of regional coalitions set up to coordinate support for various campaigns and animal causes, and to bring together activists from whole regions to work together and discuss tactics and strategies. SARC held an excellent meeting in Poole that was attended by over 50 activists. The regional meeting for East Anglia was also very well-attended with over 60 campaigners from Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, Northamptonshire and Bedfordshire present.

Without a shadow of a doubt the most positive thing to come out of the regional groups so far is the help that has been given to Jaybeth's, an animal sanctuary in Haverhill. Carol from the sanctuary came to the East Anglia meeting and told us how a local farmer was making her life a misery and trying to take her land. She was really struggling to cope emotionally, financially and physically with all the work running a successful animal sanctuary entails. Here is what she has to say:

"Dear all,
I want to say how much I am in debt to SHAC for their moral support, physical help and belief in the cause of Jaybeth. I would never have been able to move on had it not been for my good friend Jill Delaney of Newmarket bringing me to the AR meeting in Cambridge on the 15th of Feb. It was the best thing I ever did. Hats off to Roy from up North and Mel for pointing me towards excellent legal advice and giving me the chance to speak at the East Anglia ARC. Now because of this and all who helped, I've had the strength to beat the farmer, my four ponies are happy, and my sanctuary is saved. My solicitor also wrote to me telling me that an anonymous supporter of SHAC had offered to pay my £2,500 legal costs. I just wanted to say a big THANK YOU too you, whoever you are.
God Bless, Carol"

This shows what can be achieved when we all work together and back each other up. If you would like to make a donation to Carol's sanctuary, send cheques or PO's payable to 'Carol Outhwaite of Jaybeth Animal Sanctuary' (you must put this in full) and send them to the SHAC address. A special mention should go to Anne who has put a lot of hard work into setting up the East Anglia Animal Rights Coalition. Well done Anne!

This dog was used for dog fighting. Note the scars.

All these horses were rescued. The middle one was rescued from Chipperfields Circus.

This dog had his legs smashed with an iron bar.

This alsatian was thrown off a tower block.

This collie was rescued from a farm in Wales.

This cat was dumped but now spends his time happily snoozing safe and well.

LEGAL BRIEFING

Your right to protest

The first thing to remember is that demonstrators don't normally get nicked on demos at all. You might think that with all the legislation and police powers now available, SHAC protests had been made completely illegal. But on the contrary, it's still perfectly legal to protest against HLS, their suppliers and their customers, and the chances of you being arrested on one of these demos are very slim.

During the course of SHAC demos, however, you are likely to encounter the police and we know from experience that they will misquote the law and exercise their powers illegally, if they think that you do not know your rights. And of course it's always possible that you could be arrested. So this brief legal guide is designed to give you a rough idea of your rights when dealing with the police on demos and what to do in the unlikely event of being arrested.

DEMOS -GENERAL

· The police now have the power to impose conditions on most demos as to how long the protest may last and where it may occur.
· So if you don't want the police to impose conditions on your demo, it's best not to tell them in advance where you are going to hold it. There's no legal obligation to inform the police of this unless you are planning to have a march.

HOME DEMOS

· Demos outside someone's home address are not illegal. You only commit an offence if you refuse to comply with a police officer's direction to leave the scene.
· So you can legally protest all day long outside people's homes, and even if the police direct you to leave the area, they cannot stop you from going on to another demo elsewhere.

HARASSMENT INJUNCTIONS

· Several companies have taken out injunctions recently in an attempt to stifle protest against them. Although these injunctions do impose limits on protesting, they DO NOT prevent you from lawfully protesting against them. The High Court has ruled that the harassment legislation can be used to protect company employees, but not the company itself. This means that it is still perfectly lawful to protest against the company.

· If an injunction specifies an "exclusion zone" which you are not permitted to enter, it is still perfectly legal to protest just outside the exclusion zone.

· You can still politely write to, email and phone companies protected by the injunction.

· NONE of HLS' suppliers are protected by injunctions, and most of their customers are not protected either.

POLICE POWERS

GIVING YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS TO THE POLICE

· As a general rule, you never have to give your name and address to the police on demos.

· The only time you do have to give your name and address is when the police say they want to serve you with a summons. If so, they should say what offence the summons is for.
· Typically the police will ask for your details if you are the passenger in a vehicle, or during the course of a search. If they do, you should politely refuse.

SEARCHES

· If the police search you either personally or in a vehicle, they have to tell you their name and police station where they are based, the reason why they are searching you and what they are searching for.
· You are entitled to a written copy of the search and you do not have to give your name and address in order to get this.

ARREST

· If you have been arrested, DON'T WORRY. Most arrests do not result in a conviction, and many are unlawful which means that you can sue for wrongful arrest afterwards. Even if you are charged and end up in court, the chances are that you will not be convicted due to the police's incompetence and ignorance of the law.
· The arrest procedure is designed to intimidate and scare you, but you should really look upon it as a moneymaking opportunity – the longer they keep you, the more you get!
· At the police station you are entitled to speak to a lawyer, and have someone informed that you have been arrested. You should speak to a lawyer straight away – initially this will be over the phone so remember that the police will be listening.
· If you are interviewed, make sure you have a solicitor present – you are entitled to one free of charge. You have the right to remain silent so STAY SILENT. Experienced activists may sometimes give a brief statement, but this is a dangerous tactic– once you start talking to them it's hard to stop. The sole purpose of the interview is to gain evidence against you.
· ANYTHING you say can be used in evidence, whether this is in the interview room or outside. So STAY SILENT at all other times and resist attempts by the police to engage you in small talk.
· The police can now take the DNA, fingerprints and photos of anyone who is under arrest for an offence.
· Although you can be held for up to 24 hours (or 36 hours in certain cases), you will usually be out within 6 hours, unless it is a serious offence or there are a large number of protestors. So stay calm during your time in custody and you'll soon be out.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST THE POLICE

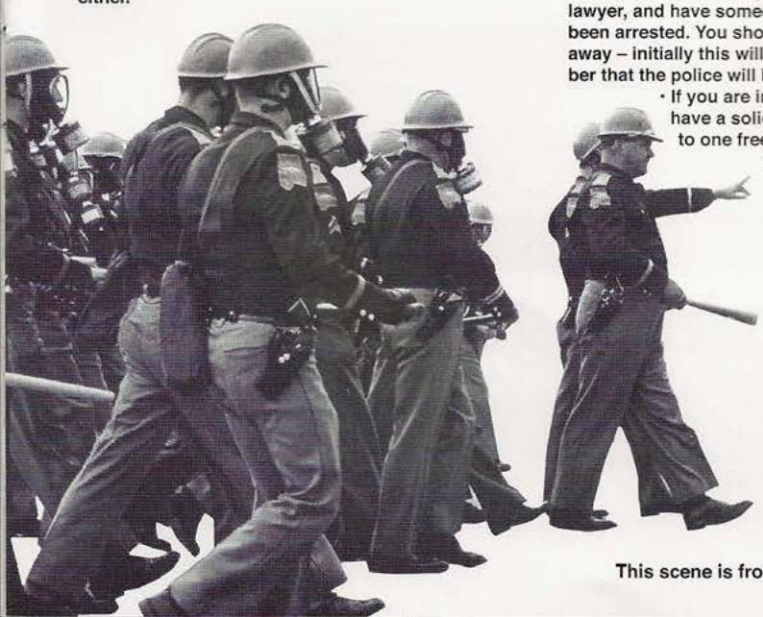

· We cannot over-emphasize how important it is to make complaints against the police. If you think that the police have dealt with you unfairly or abused their powers, you have the right to complain. The police are bound to formally investigate ANY complaint, so you should exercise this right whenever possible.
· We know from experience that the police are far less likely to abuse their powers if they think that they are going to be inundated with complaints each time they do so. Complaints from activists in the past have resulted in changes to police policy.
· All you have to do is write to the Chief Constable of the police force where the incident occurred and s/he will assign an officer to investigate. They may try to persuade you to resolve the issue "informally" eg in the form of an apology from a police officer, but remember that you have an absolute right to a formal investigation, whatever the nature of the complaint. This involves taking down written statements from you and all the other parties and generally a lot more work for the police.

SUING THE POLICE

· Most arrests do not result in a conviction, and many are unlawful. Over the years, activists have successfully sued the police for literally hundreds of thousands of pounds in damages for false imprisonment.
· In one case recently, the police paid out over fifty thousand pounds to eighteen activists who had been detained for only 6 hours.
· By suing the police you can not only raise money to plough back in to campaigning, but also make the police more reluctant to make false arrests in the future.

PROBLEMS &

SHAC ESSENTIALS
Part 1 map reading

How many times on a demo have you been in a car or a minibus that has become lost? Many people say "Oh I can't map read."

The object of this article is to give you a few pointers so you can always find your way to a demo or around on a mobile. Map reading can make the difference between being effective or not being effective.

The first thing to understand that there is nothing more to map reading than following your finger on the map BUT to do this you must pay attention as to where you are going as you go along.

The worst thing is for your driver to come to a junction or a roundabout and ask you for directions and you say "Oh hang on whilst I have a look at the map."

When you are travelling from A to B follow where you are as you pass certain landmarks or roads. It should be "Oh we are about half way to the next roundabout because we have just passed Victoria road on our left and that is about half way between the last junction and the next roundabout."

If you have the time plan your route beforehand noting page numbers and grid squares. If you don't have time and are looking up places as you go then it's really important that time is not wasted. If you have got a straight 10 miles around the M25 then don't turn round to gossip to your mates in the back but use this time to plan where you are going and over which pages.

If your route takes you over numerous pages it is good to have them all open at the same time. What I mean by this is that you can access them quickly so you flow from one page to the next on your route. Do whatever works for you. Some people take a few pegs along and simply put pegs or paper clips at the top of all the pages you are travelling across. The most important point is that you do not write on the map or permanently mark it in any way - even if you're not doing anything dodgy it's a nasty habit to get into.

Some people turn the map the way they are going so it is in effect upside down (see diagram above) but this way means that Victoria road which is on the left is left on the map as you are looking at it.
There are no hard and fast rules as far as this is concerned - try both and use the one that works for you.

Lastly don't make map reading into a big deal as it's about staying calm, planning ahead, looking ahead and then following your finger on the map.

Let your fingers do the walking and then when you get there let your mouth do the shouting and your legs do the running.

The SHAC boffin is here for this issue to answer your questions. If you have any questions that are not covered here please don't hesitate to contact us and we will do our best to answer your question. Also if you think we have got our advice wrong or it could be added to then let us know. One word of advice though whatever you do don't mention his dodgy haircut as he's a bit touchy about it.

We had a phone call from SHAC activist David Barry saying he had been served with the Japanese injunction by sending perfectly polite letters of protest to the Japanese customers of Huntingdon.

This is a further example of these companies abusing their position. There is no legal basis for them doing this and it is perfectly legal for to write or ring the Japanese customers of Huntingdon (see page 2 for their details.) This does raise an interesting point nonetheless and my advice would be to stay anonymous. Cambridgeshire police's current strategy seems to be to harass as many campaigners as possible hoping they will give up and go and wash their hair instead. Don't let the police get away with it. Keep it simple and don't include your name and address. Then they can't find you!

I have been warned on several demos that if I persist in shouting I may be arrested even though I wasn't being abusive. I am sure they were acting illegally. What should I do?

Yes the police very often make things up and are acting illegally BUT the most important thing you need is a record of the conversation or their actions and yours if need be. Without a record of what was said then it is simply your word against theirs and unfortunately in the eyes of the law their word carries more weight than ours. One of the activist's most useful weapons is a camcorder and a stills camera if you can afford both. No local group in the UK should be without a camcorder. Digital camcorders can now be bought for less than £300 across Britain.
Then record what is happening and complain (see overleaf on how to do this). If a particular police officer or force persists then contact a solicitor and take legal action if necessary BUT you must have the evidence first.

I can't attend the demos as all the targets are not in my area and also I work Saturday mornings. How can I still help?

Diary dates are just a rough guide of what the current focuses of the campaign are, but why not be flexible about what you can do and when. With a little forthought and initiative, shopping trips & lunch breaks can be combined with phone calls. Are you going to another area for the day? Why not look to see if there are some suppliers you could visit to pop in and give some leaflets to? There is a contribution to be made from everyone who supports the campaign. Think about what you can do to help and do it today.

YOUR SAY

We have said it many times before but this is always worth repeating. SHAC welcomes your ideas, your input, your sugggestions, and yes, even your criticisms! This is YOUR campaign and is only as strong as the sum total of all the hard work you put into it, and the guts and commitment you show in fighting to close HLS down. This campaign is a massive learning curve for all of us, and has moved many ideas and tactics forward. However no-one has all the answers and there is always room for improvement and development, so get in touch and tell us your thoughts and ideas.

Q

I have seen PGP mentioned in the newsletter before and didn't think about it at the time but now the more I think about it the more I am interested in computer security.

A

There are many products on the market that cover computer security BUT there is only one that we have personally seen that has been proved over court cases to be uncrackable and that is PGP.

You can get PGP on a cd for free from the campaign or even easier you can download it for free from www.pgpi.org. Just download the one for your operating system ie Windows 98 etc.

PGP allows you to send and receive encrypted emails and to encrypt and securely delete files on your computer. You can also wipe the free space on your computer. You see when you trash a file or a folder normally on your computer you cannot see it when you have trashed it but it is still there on your computer and be electronically recovered by whoever at a later date. However if you PGP wipe files then they are gone forever. PGP can be a bit tricky to get your head round at first but please persevere as it is well worth it. You can see a step by step guide to installation at www.shac.net/pgp/index.html

Another product worth looking at is evidence eliminator found at www.evidence-eliminator.com BUT we do not have personal experience of this so judge for yourselves. Lastly a website well worth checking for general advice on computer issues is http://security.resist.ca

I have been making phone calls to customers of Huntingdon and I had the police round saying I had been harrassing them even though I was poilite. Surely this can't be correct.

Spot on. They are wrong and are in effect harrassing you. Here's how with our help you can turn the tables on them. First thing is to stay calm. Secondly you must get their names and number and if possible which police force they are from. If you are arrested say nothing other than your name, address and date of birth and NO MORE.Then contact one of the solicitors on the legal page.

The norm though is that they will turn up to your home wanting to speak to you or asking you to come down to the station for a 'talk'. You should politely ask them who they are and then REFUSE. FACT if they had any evidence or a case then they would not give you the choice they would just arrest you and it is not in YOUR interest to co operate. Always let us know what is happening and we will happily arrange for legal action to be taken against the police officer. Unfortunately Dixon of Dock Green was an actor and real life cops are very different.

They are not on your side and when they say they just want to sort it out they actually mean they want to take you to court but haven't got enough evidence so NEVER help them to screw you and lastly NEVER EVER let a copper into your house unless they have got a search warrant - they must show you this.

Lastly do not even give them the opportunity to harrass you - use a phonebox, use an internet cafe and do not put your address on any correspondence. If they don't know who you are then they cannot illegally harrass you. This advice is given to protect you, and not to encourage you to do anything illegal. Remember SHAC only encourages polite communications and peaceful demos.

SHAC ESSENTIALS

Part 2 mobile demos

Mobile demos eh? You either love 'em or hate 'em. If you hate 'em there's not much I can say other than to point out that whilst marching around Cambridge eating veggie burgers is good for recruiting new people and having a show of force and unity, it will not close Huntingdon down nor will it persuade companies to stop dealing with Huntingdon. Mobile demos have and do all of the above. Our view is that both have an important part to play in the closure of Huntingdon Life Sciences. This article is not meant to point the finger at those who do not like mobiles but is to show that with a bit of planning more people would enjoy and participate more effectively in mobile demos.

That said let's get on with how. I will list the most essential things you need:

1 A full tank of fuel 2 A good atlas of the UK

3 A good naviagator or if you don't have one then become one - see opposite page.

4 Make sure you give your mobile number to SHAC at least 1 week in advance of the demo and that it is fully charged and is on from 8am on the morning of the demo. Also make sure that there is credit on the phone.

As soon as you are given maps or instructions get your map reader to work planning the route out then get going as quick as you can (the map reader can plan as you are going if they have to).

Speed is essential. If you drag your heels then the cops will catch the demo up and try to ruin it (they're not big fans of mobiles - can't think why).

Try and have a toilet break on your way to the demo as people trundling around the services wastes time. Remember these demos are not a day out, we have all got a job to do for the animals.

Use your initiative and have a list of the latest suppliers and customers in your car in case you have truly lost the demo then you can improvise. An example of this was a car on a mobile was lost so they decided to improvise. They had a list of all suppliers and simply rung directory enquiries to see who had a branch in the area they ended up in. They found two and off they went.

If you are lost and haven't got a chance to find any targets then try to become a decoy for the police. The copper following you doesn't know you're lost so he will keep following you and if he's following you then he's one less on the look out for someone who does know where they are going. The choice is yours but remember the animals don't have a choice so if you throw you arms in the air and go home the enemy have won and the animals have lost.

e to Britain...we're waiting for you

Other campaigns getting stuck in

Hunt Saboteurs Association

As we're sure most of you will be aware, hunting has not been banned yet. Rumours abound that a ban could be in place as early as January 2005, although wildlife doesn't deposit money in party coffers so you never can be sure if it will happen. In the meantime, approximately 500 hunts will take place in this country EVERY WEEK. This is what we are trying to stop happening. Hunt saboteurs are still regularly attending hunts and saving lives.

Hunt sabotage saves lives here and now using simple yet effective tactics such as mimicking the huntsman's horn and voice calls or spraying scent dulling sprays. It does not entrust the lives of animals to the whims of politicians. It has a long term effect on the killing ability of a pack if carried out regularly but it still saves lives of the individual animals - and each one counts.

On 21 Feb sabs at a joint meet of the Cotswold Vale and Monmouth hunts saved a horse that a huntsman had ridden through boggy land in his desperation to catch a fox. It's not just the hunted animals' lives that are at stake. The pic show sabs mid-rescue.

As the prospect of a ban looms, policing levels have increased to a ridiculous level and have targetted saboteurs whilst ignoring blatant assaults by huntspeople. At a meet of the Crawley and Horsham hunt in January 7 saboteurs faced the wrath of 42 cops constantly trying to arrest them for using public footpaths. They failed to take action against hunters riding down sabs until it was too late and the sab in the picture on the right had to be taken to hospital.

At the Hampshire Hunt, cops have been busy shoving sabs around and then assaulting anyone who tries to video it. A recent meet of the Surrey Union saw cops aiding hunt staff at a dig out by arresting everyone they could grab and even witnessed assaults by hunt members on sabs and failed to do anything. In the face of this adversity we carry on because we know the animals' lives are worth fighting for and nothing beats the feeling when you see them run free thanks to our efforts. And the more of us there are, the more we can do.....

If a ban comes in, some hunters have vowed to break the law and we will have to be there to save lives where this happens. A hunting ban will not see an end to other bloodsports such as shooting of pheasants, grouse and partridge or angling so direct action against bloodsports will still be needed as much as ever. Bloodsports can be stopped in their tracks. If not you, who? If not now, when? If you aren't already involved you can help by joining the HSA as an active or supporting member.

Save the Newchurch Guineapigs

Newchurch Farm in Staffordshire breed thousands of guinea pigs to sell to vivisection labs worldwide. They also supply Huntingdon Life Sciences. Save the Newchurch Guinea Pigs Campaign are fighting to close down Newchurch with a brave and innovative campaign that needs support from every one of you.

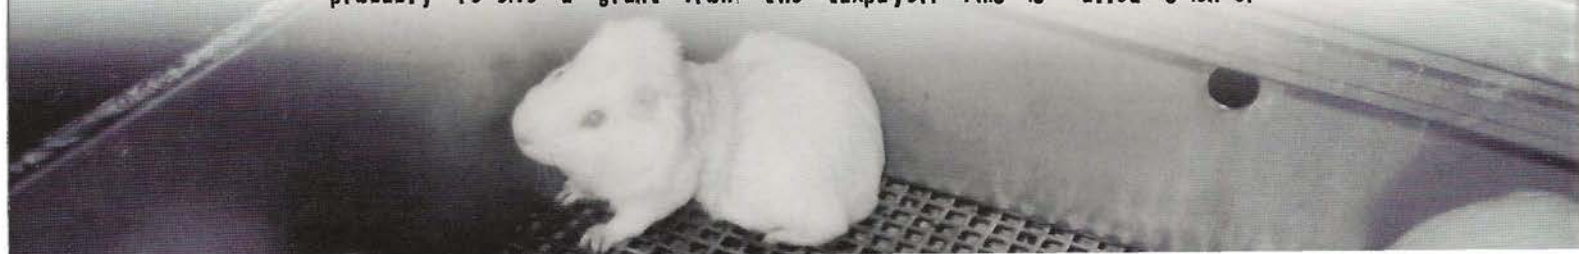

At the moment it seems that every new day brings another bit of bad news for the guinea pig breeders David Hall & Partners. So much so, that it must be getting quite difficult to get out of bed in the morning, not only because it's freezing cold after their gas supplier Calor Gas callously dumped them after one demo and a whole lot of e-mails, but also as they have received a few disturbing letters in the post, notably two by recorded delivery from two different breweries informing them that they are no longer welcome in their pubs. The Halls humiliatingly had to sign for these letters which came after a couple of demos and a few e-mails, letters and phone calls highlighted the kind of low life clientele these pubs were attracting.

W.T Parker, a security installation firm, has also contacted the campaign to say that they will not be doing any more work for the Halls. But the biggest blow must have been the resignation of John Wright in January. One of their most local and vocal employees, Wright was responsible for driving guinea pigs to their deaths in the labs. He is now putting his feet up and beginning to remember what life was like before the campaign.
And there's lots more to come. Week of action March 19th-25th, National demo at Darley Oaks Farm Saturday March 20th, World Day demo Saturday April 24th and of course all the usual Sunday and Wednesday demos. For more info on how you can help contact the campaign.

One last point that many may not realise. All the Newchurch workers have all the windows and doors of their houses covered in metal roller shutters of the type you see on shop fronts in city centres. Just what you need isn't it on a nice summer's evening ...er...except they can't see out of their windows cos of the shutters. Is this as clear an indication as you need of the state Newchurch are in?

Work this one out. If you burnt this guinea pig at home it would be illegal. You would be arrested, prosecuted and maybe sent to prison.It would be called animal cruelty. However if you get a licence from the Home Office not only would it be legal to burn this guinea pig but you would probably receive a grant from the taxpayer. This is called science.

A MOVEMENT MOVING FORWARD IS A MOVEMENT THAT IS WINNING

Something that is rarely mentioned is the progress the animal rights movement has made in the last 25 years. I say 25 years because it was about then that direct action really took off. This is not to suggest that it's all over and we should all go down the pub for a drink..of course that is still a massive amount of work to do.

Saying that, it is good for ourselves and also to explain to others that things are moving in the right direction and that a lot of progress has been made.

Nearly 20 years ago there was close on 150 fur farms in the UK and many of them had arctic foxes in them by the thousand. Some reading this will remember the notorious Cocksparrow fox fur farm and the ones in Yorkshire to name a few. At the start of last year fur farming was banned in the UK, gone forever.

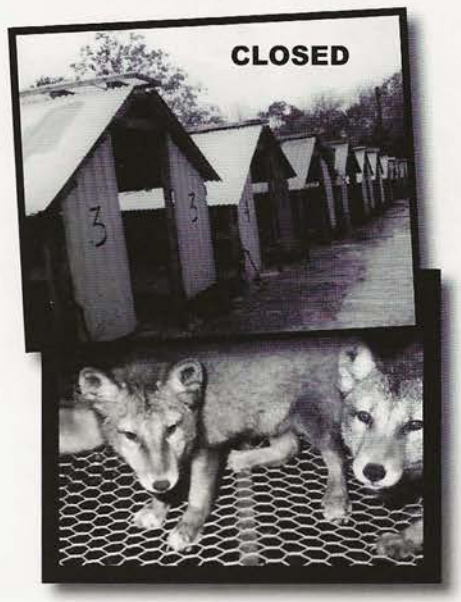

Who remembers department stores like House of Frasers etc with huge fur departments in them and walking down roads in city centres and there being five or six fur shops pretty much in a row? Whilst the fur industry is not dead it is still a shadow of its former self.

In the late 60's there was close on 30 dolphinariums in the UK today there are none. Circuses were everywhere and were often on TV. Remember when one of the highlights of Boxing Day TV was the circus? No more. Circuses are dying and they know it with just a tiny handful left showing to dismal audiences.

Zoos also are on the way out as more and more people realise that animals should be in the wild. We have seen several major zoos close in the last 3 years alone.

25 years ago the Home Office figures showed that around 6 million animals were used in labs. Today that figure is 2.7 million, which of course is 2.7 million animals too many and I also note that the last couple of years they have risen but still - it is less than half what it was 25 years ago.

Foxhunting is on its last legs, they know it and we know it. The sabs know more than anyone that now is the time to up the pressure and not to get complacent. Did you know that in the 70's on ITV's World of Sport they used to read out the hare coursing results from around the country along with the football scores on a saturday afternoon. Sounds incredible I know but it's true. This last point really rams home the fact that whilst we should all step up our actions, we are a movement that is forcing change, moving in the right direction and most importantly saving animals' lives now

The building below WAS an animal testing lab called Worplesdon in Surrey. They used to experiment for pesticides on foxes, badgers, barn owls, birds of prey, rabbits and other wild animals. Most of these animals were caught in the wild. Worplesdon was burned down hence the lack of roof and is now closed.

ONE STRUGGLE ONE FIGHT

The recent victory by the a/r movement over Cambridge University's plans to build Europe's largest primate lab was not achieved in isolation. Cambridge University and the government were defeated because our movement has a united purpose and whatever banner we fight under our aim to defeat animal abuse is shared with equal passion and determination. Whether it is SNGP, SHAC or SPEAK the overriding issue is how we move this struggle forward and bring animal liberation a step nearer.

The truth is that every action that is taken in support of a campaign is an action that moves us forward. The combined pressure of activists working together is a force that cannot be denied. We are entering exciting times for our movement and vivisection is under the spotlight like never before. This situation has been bought about because we refuse to go away and because we have learnt where we can be most effective and more importantly what we can do as a unified movement.

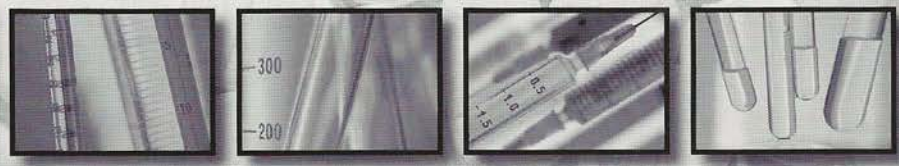

The task that faces our movement is enormous in scale but we have already shown ourselves to be not only effective but highly resistant to all efforts to stamp us out. This is not down to some magical force but a shared realisation that we do have the intelligence and vision to see this through to the end. Consort, Hillgrove, Regal Rabbits and Shamrock Farm are totems that represent liberation for thousands of animals. They also act as testament to what is possible and why we are winning. The animals inside Newchurch, HLS or Oxford University may have different banners for us to rally under but their liberation lies in all of our hands.

Science news

Yet again there has been massive newspaper coverage of outright fraud by the drugs industry

Experiments on animals should end, say doctors

By Roger Highfield, Science Editor
(Filed: 28/02/2004)

Doctors are calling for a moratorium on animal experiments until their contribution to health is properly evaluated.

Prof Ian Roberts, of the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, and other members of the "Reviewing Animal Trials Systematically Group" say there is "little evidence" that the research has contributed to treating human disease, adding that justification rests on "anecdotal evidence or unsupported claims".

Their call for the moratorium in today's British Medical Journal is rejected by the Royal Society, which says in a report that virtually every medical treatment developed in the past century rests in some way on vivisection.

It also comes as Lord Sainsbury, the science minister, is due to announce plans for a "virtual" national centre, consisting of a network of researchers, for The Three Rs - refinement, reduction and replacement of animal testing.

Prof Roberts said yesterday that research on animals had not seen the same revolution as in human clinical trials, where analyses are carried out on the totality of studies.

"You want a good overview of what all experiments show," he said. "When there have been systematic reviews of animal experiments, a lot have been very poorly designed, very small and contribute next to nothing.

"Whatever your views on vivisection, you should be against research that does not contribute any knowledge."

The doctors want a programme of research to review existing animal data, to find out if the animal research can be applied to humans, hoping to end the long debate between pro and antivivisectionists about their value in improving human health.

"Ideally, new animal studies should not be conducted until the best use has been made of existing animal studies and until their validity and generalisability to clinical medicine has been assessed," said Prof Roberts.

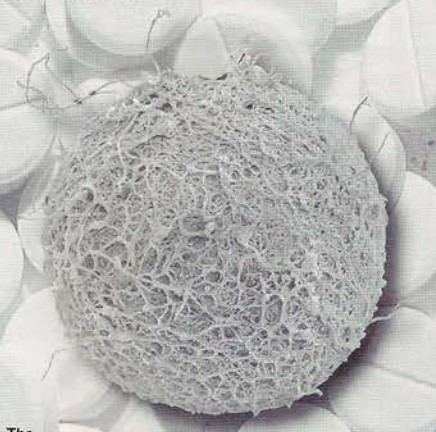

"We are only asking that the same standards as are applied in human research are applied to animal research. We would not tolerate haphazard potentially biased reviews of human research. So why should we tolerate this for animal research?"

The report was attacked by the Coalition for Medical Progress, an umbrella group of university scientists, research charities, patient groups, pharmaceutical companies and biotech firms to explain the need for animal research in biomedical studies.

Philip Connolly, the coalition director, said: "This paper misleads in implying there is little evidence to support research using animals."

He cited the Royal Society report that "quotes polio, kidney dialysis, stomach ulcers and cystic fibrosis as just four areas where the advances are clear. The evidence is in our hospital wards, clinics and homes with the effective medicines we take."

Drug company experts advised staff to withhold data about SSRI use in children

The Canadian Medical Association

An internal document advised staff at the international drug giant GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) to withhold clinical trial findings in 1998 that indicated the antidepressant paroxetine (Paxil in North America and Seroxat in the UK) had no beneficial effect in treating adolescents.

Paroxetine is 1 of 6 drugs in the class of selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors (SSRIs) that Britain and the US have since banned for pediatric use because of increased risk of suicide. On Feb. 2, Health Canada issued a public warning that the pediatric use of 7 antidepressants — paroxetine, bupropion (Wellbutrin), citalopram (Celexa), fluvoxamine (Luvox), mirtazapine (Remeron), sertraline (Zoloft) and venlafaxine (Effexor) — should proceed only after consultation with the treating physician "to confirm that the benefits of the drug still outweigh its potential risks."

The GSK internal document obtained by CMAJ offers a glimpse into the inner workings of a drug giant. Entitled "Seroxat/Paxil Adolescent Depression: Position piece on the phase III clinical studies," the confidential document was prepared by the Central Medical Affairs team (CMAt), a division of SmithKline Beecham (which subsequently merged with Glaxo Wellcome to form GSK).

The document provides guidance on how to manage the results of 2 clinical trials conducted into the efficacy of paroxetine (Seroxat). Given that the clinical trials results were, according to the document, "insufficiently robust" to support an application to regulatory authorities for a label change approving Seroxat for use in pediatric depression, CMAt recommended the firm "effectively manage the dissemination of these data in order to minimize any potential negative commercial impact."

Sales for Seroxat amounted to almost $4.97 billion worldwide in 2003.
Study 329, conducted in the US from 1993–1996, was the largest trial to date on using an SSRI in a pediatric population. According to the document, the results indicated paroxetine was no more effective than placebo. In the other trial, Study 377, carried out in Europe, South America and elsewhere, placebo was actually more effective than the antidepressant.

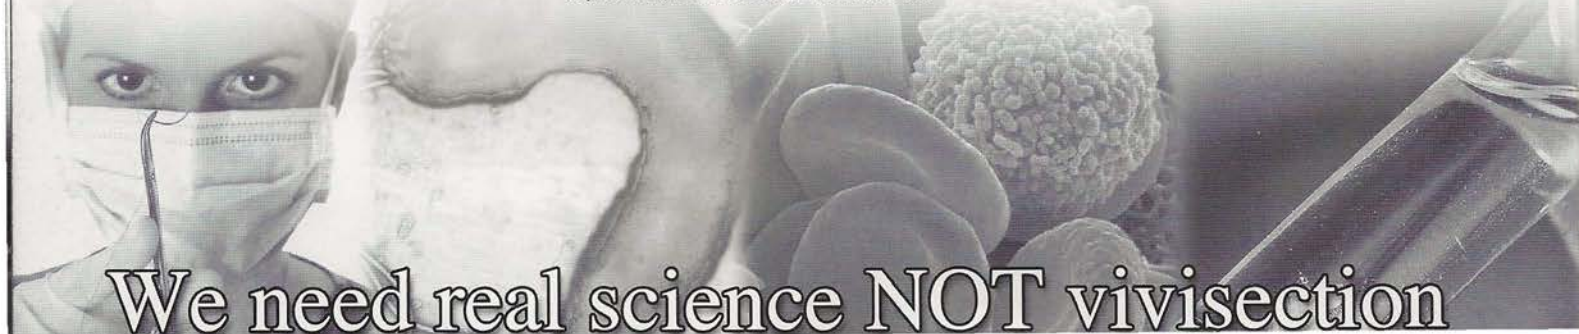

The CMAt document advised that "Positive data from Study 329 will be published in abstract form at the [European College of Neuropsychopharmacology] meeting" in November 1998 and that "a full manuscript ... will be progressed." It also stated that "It would be commercially unacceptable to include a statement that efficacy had not been demonstrated, as this would undermine the profile of paroxetine."

GSK spokeswoman Jill McKinlay-Morris said that "the memo draws an inappropriate conclusion and is not consistent with the facts." She didn't elaborate on that point, but went on to say "GSK abided by all regulatory requirements for submitting safety data. We also communicated safety and efficacy data to physicians through posters, abstracts, and other publications."
Study 329 was eventually published (J Am Acad Child Adolesc Psychiatry 2001;40[7]:762-72) in 2001. The authors concluded that paroxetine is "generally well tolerated and effective for major depression in adolescents."
Among the 93 adolescents taking Seroxat, there were 5 serious cases of "emotional lability" (e.g., suicidal ideation/ gestures). Among the 95 patients taking the comparison treatment, imipramine (Tofranil), there was 1 such case, and among the 89 subjects receiving placebo there was also 1. According to the article, only 1 serious adverse event — headache in 1 patient — was considered by the treating investigator to be related to paroxetine treatment.

Britain's Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Authority (MHRA) advised doctors in June 2003 that paroxetine should not be prescribed to patients under the age of 18 because evidence from various clinical trials showed that episodes of suicidal behaviour were between 1.5 and 3.2 times higher in children taking the drug than in those receiving placebo. Several nations, including the US, France and Ireland, quickly followed suit.

The MHRA subsequently reviewed and banned the pediatric use of 6 other SSRIs (exempting fluoxetine [Prozac]) and is now reviewing their use among adults. The US Food and Drug Administration is now reviewing pediatric trials of 8 antidepressants.

It's been estimated that as many as 11 million American and 3 million Canadian children are taking antidepressants. —

WARNING

THE PICTURES ON THE FOLLOWING PAGES ARE SHOCKING BUT ARE A STARK REMINDER OF THE HUMAN DAMAGE CUSTOMERS OF HUNTINGDON INFLICT UPON HUMAN BEINGS ACROSS THE GLOBE EVERY SINGLE DAY.

THE NEXT TIME SOMEONE TALKS ABOUT HOW THESE VERY COMPANIES ARE TRYING TO HELP HUMANITY PLEASE SHOW THEM THESE PICTURES.

Q. Any babies?

There are many, many examples of Huntingdon's customers' records of environmental and human destruction. Most of Huntingdon's work comes from chemical companies intent on only one thing - profit. Here we look at the cases of Agent Orange which was produced by Monsanto, Dow and Uniroyal (all Huntingdon customers) and the leak of gas from the plant at Bhopal in India that killed many thousands of people and blinded many more. This plant was owned by Union Carbide (a Huntingdon customer) who are now owned by Dow. Huntingdon have an Indian sales office and are actively involved in the pesticides market in India - they are callously profiting from horrific human suffering.

BHOPAL

Why did it happen?
The factory in Bhopal, one of the 14 facilities operated by Union Carbide, was set up in 1969. The first batch of MIC was imported from the USA in 1973 and in 1979 the Bhopal plant started to manufacture its own MIC. MIC is is methyl isocyanate, a component chemical in the production of Sevin, one of the most deadly substances known to man and kept by Carbide in quantities 80 times over EU limits in Bhopal.

Sevin is the brand of Carbaryl-based pesticide being manufactured at the Bhopal plant. Though the design of the MIC unit was based on Union Carbide's West Virginia plant, grossly lower standards were employed in the selection of construction material, monitoring devices and safety systems.

Costcutting
Union Carbide wanted to save money. Accidental leaks from all the units were frequent, and operators and workers were regularly exposed to different substances. The UCIL factory was running at a loss. In November 1984 the most important safety systems were either closed down or not functioning. Workers had to pay the cost of these economy measures with their health, jobs and, as many as 16,000 paid with their lives.

What happened that night
On the night of the disaster, water (that was being used for washing the lines) entered the tank containing MIC through leaking valves. The refrigeration unit, which should have kept the MIC close to zero degrees centigrade, had been shut off by the company officials to save on electricity bills. The entrance of water in the tank, full of MIC at ambient temperature triggered off an exothermic runaway reaction and consequently the release of the lethal gas mixture. The safety systems, which in any case were not designed for such a runaway situation, were non-functioning and under repair. Lest the neighborhood community be "unduly alarmed", the siren in the factory

AGENT ORANGE

Agent Orange was a herbicide sprayed over the jungle during the Vietnam war as part of the US campaign to defoliate large sections of the jungle on Vietnam. The three top pictures and the main picture are all children who died or are suffering because of Agent Orange. These are not old pictures but were taken within the last few years. It is estimated that to date 500,000 people have died from exposure to Agent Orange and that there are 650,000 who are crippled by it. Agent Orange was manufactured by Dow, Monsanto, Diamond Shamrock Corporation, Hercules Inc., Uniroyal inc., T-H Agricultural & Nutrition Company, and Thompson Chemical Corporation.

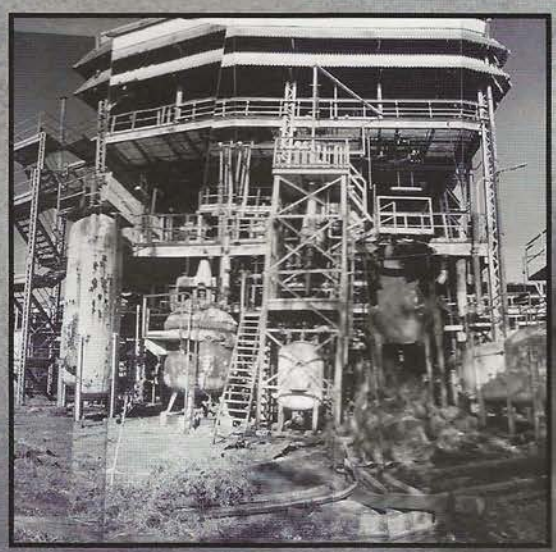

Chemically, the product was a 50/50 mix of two herbicides, 2,4,-D (2,4, dichlorophenoxyacetic acid) and 2,4,5-T (2,4,5 trichlorophenoxyacetic acid). Dioxin is now also a major domestic concern, scientists having discovered that it is a by-product of many ordinary industrial processes, including smelting, the bleaching of paper pulp and solid waste incineration. The US environmental protection agency, pressed into a 12-year inquiry, recently concluded that it is a "class-1 human carcinogen".

PRISONER SUPPORT

"A movement is only as strong as its prisoner support."

Two animal rights activists, Paul Holiday (ex-Hillgrove prisoner) and Paul Leboutillier, were found guilty of making phone calls to various animal abusers including Covance staff at work and at home, HLS share holders, hunt scum, farmers, agricultural suppliers, shooters and other low life.
Paul Holiday received 18 months. Paul Leboutillier were sentenced to a highly outrageous 5 years.
Please send letters of support to:

Paul Holliday KA9328

Paul Le Boutillier KA9326

I tell you this for a fact if it wasn't for people like Paul Holliday the cats you are looking at in the picture on the right would be dead and Hillgrove farm would still be open. Paul Holliday got 12 months for a charge to do with Hillgrove cat farm. These two deserve all our support. Don't worry if you don't know them, just write. The best letters are ones that keep the prisoner up to date with what's going on, what you have been doing and funny letters are always good to get. One of the highlights of their day is getting letters and the more they get the more they realise they are not and will never be forgotten. Loads of letters also lets the prison see this and makes them realise that they are very very special people.
For those writing please remember that all letters are read so please do not put in anything that is silly. SUPPORT THEM.

NEW MERCHANDISE

This leaflet has been requested by many SHAC supporters and is excellent for giving to the general public who let us not forget are Huntingdon's banker and insurer..oh without their knowledge of course. This leaflet is excellent for recruiting new people because there is nothing that agitates people as thinking THEIR money, that they are spending as you are giving this leaflet to them, is being wasted.

We have got thousands of posters and leaflets advertising World Day - please make a huge effort to put these up and distribute them. We always get lots of new calls from people who want to come on World Day and get involved in the campaign from areas where people have put the work into advertising the demo, so give us a ring and we'll ge them straight in the post to you. Libraries, health food shops, schools, colleges, public notice boards- the list of places you can out them is endless. The dog one is a picture inside HLS, the cat one is a cat being experimented on.
