" We never give in and we always win."

"I looked through the window when just 4055 remained. Normally he is very stoic and calm, but today I saw him barking frantically and dancing all around his cage in the empty room. When he saw me looking at him, his barking became hysterical and I had to walk away. I could not even go in to give him one last reassuring word. I was his last chance in those final moments before death and there was nothing I could do to help him."

AR 2004 REPORT

THE Writeup

Animal Rights 2004 saw activists from all over the world come together for one of the most productive, hard-working and enjoyable events for a long time. There were even activists from as far away as Hawai and New Zealand - amazing! In the weeks running up to AR 2004 the press went completely crazy with all kinds of articles about terrorist training camps that were just the funniest things ever and bore not the slightest resemblance to the truth - not that that has ever worried them!

There were workshops covering lots of different subjects including history of the movement with the old luminaries like Ronnie Lee, Dave Whetton and Mike Nunn. Steve Best the best-selling author gave a fascinating talk on the philosophy of the movement and Jerry Vlasak, USA trauma surgeon and activist, spoke via video about the scientific fraud of animal testing after being banned from the country with his wife Pamelyn in a bizarre Home Office decision.

Entertainment was had by all as 'undercover' journalists gave themselves away with their non-stop questions on illegal actions and by being the only ones desperately scribbling away in shorthand, and were unceremoniously evicted throughout the weekend to make their way back to the nearest train station, hopefully on foot.

Discussions continued into the night around the camp-fires with activists comparing strategies on tackling animal abusers on a global scale. Activists gave talks about their various campaigns and some brilliant, inspiring videos were shown. The hardcore activists stayed up all night partying - and still made it to all the workshops the next day!

AR 2004 was held at Marion and Mark's animal sanctuary and it was wonderful to be surrounded by all the animals they have saved and they really brought it home to everyone what we are fighting for. All in all a wonderful 4 days that brought together people who have devoted their lives to fighting for the animals and will never give up until they win and the day of animal liberation dawns. Looking round at all those people from all round the world united by compassion and the sheer will to win, the animal abusers haven't got a hope in hell.....

Oi! What about us?

Marion and Mark run Friends Animal Sanctuary where AR 2004 took place. They both spend their lives providing refuge for animals and countless lives have been saved thanks to them.

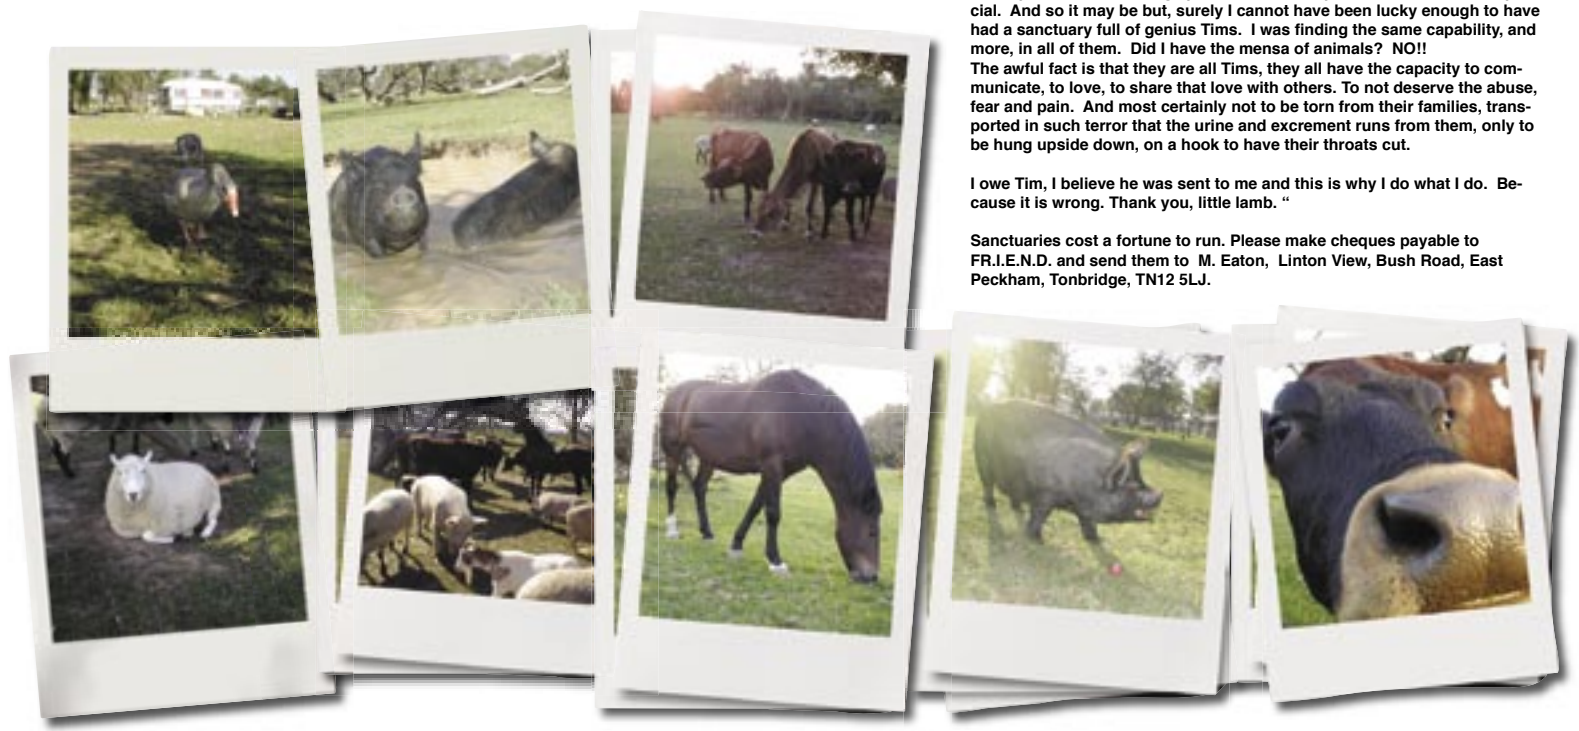

"When lives are for sale, picking up a dying lamb on a bitterly, cold January morning and then putting it back down, knowing £1 from your pocket was all it would take to change everything, is a hard one. Well, actually, it wasn't. I'd quite happily have bought a bag of chips for £1 so a life wasn't much of a dilemma. Especially when I looked into the pen and saw tiny, new-born, baby sheep on hard concrete, not so much as a blade of bedding and no protection from the brittle, winter wind. I'd picked a sick, little lamb up from the group and couldn't put him down again. If he was going to die then he'd die snuggled up on a soft bed with the taste of warm milk in his mouth. And die, he did, despite all the warmth and milk and veterinary care.
I called him Tim. And he was my little boy.
Tim changed my life. I say that without any shadow of a doubt. My disabled little lamb that never walked properly was my baby and the bond between us was evident and had huge impact on all that encountered us. He died at about 2 months but in that short time he touched so many people.

Tim communicated with me. It was witnessed by all and became a bit of a local attraction. I'd ask him if he wanted his "bocky bock" (ok, that was soppy talk for bottle) and he'd respond and even indicate to me how long I had to prepare it, and God help me if I got it wrong!!! I quickly learned his calls and there was no denying that this little baby was comunicating with me. Even my father, an ardent meat eater used to get me to, "ask him" so that people would see how clever he was! My experiences with Tim lead me into looking at other farmed animals. If everyone believes, wrongly, that sheep were stupid then what were the clever ones capable of? What a wonderful world I discovered.

When you have something special that's what you want to think it is, special. And so it may be but, surely I cannot have been lucky enough to have had a sanctuary full of genius Tims. I was finding the same capability, and more, in all of them. Did I have the mensa of animals? NO!!
The awful fact is that they are all Tims, they all have the capacity to communicate, to love, to share that love with others. To not deserve the abuse, fear and pain. And most certainly not to be torn from their families, transported in such terror that the urine and excrement runs from them, only to be hung upside down, on a hook to have their throats cut.

I owe Tim, I believe he was sent to me and this is why I do what I do. Because it is wrong. Thank you, little lamb. "

Sanctuaries cost a fortune to run. Please make cheques payable to FR.I.E.N.D. and send them to M. Eaton, Linton View, Bush Road, East Peckham, Tonbridge, TN12 5LJ.

The pictures below are from a home demo at GSK chairman JP Garnier's house in Philadelphia, USA.

GSK and Astra Zeneca threaten to pull out of the UK due to animal rights pressure.... O.K. see you then

TWO of the world's biggest drug manufacturers have threatened to withdraw new research and development investment from Britain unless the Government cracks down on animal militants. The heads of GlaxoSmith-Kline (GSK) and AstraZeneca warned the Prime Minister at a private meeting that they would not "spend another pound" on new facilities unless there is stringent action.

GSK spends more than £1 billion a year — £3 million a day — in Britain. The Times has learnt that J. P. Garnier, GSK's chief executive, and Sir Tom McKillop, head of AstraZeneca, made their feelings known to Tony Blair at a meeting in May. The Government announced new legislation in July, a move that was welcomed as a "step in the right direction" by the pharmaceutical industry.

Sir Tom told The Times last night that it was accepted that the Government was seriously worried about animal rights extremism but that enforcement of new legislation remained a problem.

"At regular meetings with ministers, we have said that we cannot continue to function unless you deal with the animal rights issue," he said. "The implications economically are desperately serious."

A spokesman for GSK said that all conversations between Dr Garnier and the Government were strictly private. Aisling Burnand, chief executive of the BioIndustry Association, said that last weekend's "training camp" for animal rights activists proved that extremists were intent on maintaining pressure on the industries. "The new measures must work because otherwise research in the UK faces a bleak future," she said.

GSK said yesterday that new investment in the UK fluctuates, but that it had spent £70 million in the past nine months on centres in Harlow, Essex, and Hammersmith, West London.

If GSK and AstraZeneca stop investing in research and development in the UK, it would be devastating for Gordon Brown. Four years ago, he placed research and development at the centre of his drive to create a knowledge-based economy.

Pharmaceutical companies contribute £6.7 billion to Britain's gross domestic product and £12 billion in exports.

"Further to our recent conversations we are confirming by this email that Kinesis Limited and Kinesis Solutions will not accept orders or promote products to Huntingdon Life Sciences (HLS). We will also let all our distributors know that buying products from us which will end up at HLS will result in them have their distributor agreement terminated, this will be a big enough deterrent for them not to get involved.

We hope by making this statement and giving you this undertaking that SHAC believes we have tried to meet your demands and that we as a company are now removed from any target list, we would expect confirmation of this by email. All members of our company will be informed of this statement and a complete block is put on the HLS account.
We look forward to your response.

Editorial

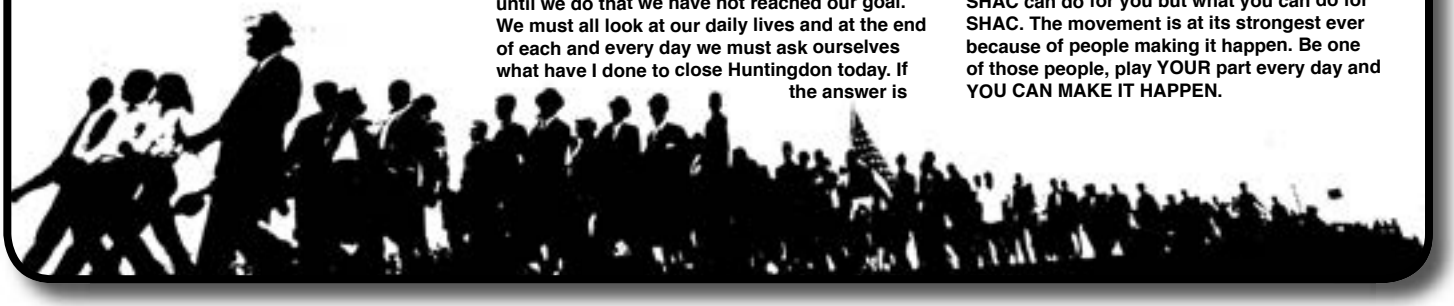

" I don't know of any company that has come to the U.K. in recent times. I suspect this is because of the worries about animal activism." Tom McKillop, CEO Astra Zeneca, 7th Oct 2004

" We must have phoned 80 different laundries, but not one of them would do business with us." Brian Cass, Aug 2004

Those two statements say more than I ever could, but those statements don't make themselves, people make them happen. The successes of the campaign are made by people making them happen by hard work and determination.

The campaign does not exist to entertain people and these newsletters are not produced as coffee table reading. We exist to inspire and most of all close Huntingdon life Sciences and until we do that we have not reached our goal. We must all look at our daily lives and at the end of each and every day we must ask ourselves what have I done to close Huntingdon today. If the answer is nothing then we are the wrong campaign for you. If the answer is that you have taken actions then we need you and more like you.

Wars are not won by pessimists. Look at the Viet Cong who with nothing defeated the most powerful army in the world. Wars are won by people with positive minds, hard work, energy and innovation. It is this and only this that will save the animals in Huntingdon. It's not what SHAC can do for you but what you can do for SHAC. The movement is at its strongest ever because of people making it happen. Be one of those people, play YOUR part every day and YOU CAN MAKE IT HAPPEN.

News and Views

A record 12 demos at 12 targets in 1 day

From the very recently leaked list of Companies that forms HLS's distribution network, a record 12 suppliers were visited in an effort to stop them delivering to HLS. 3 have already pulled out after just one visit! All it takes HLS is one look at the disgusting experiments you conduct and these companies want nothing more to do with you!

ARK Forwarding, a company linked with Courier Network were amongst the 12 visited. ARK very responsibly put his hands up and said "No Way". He quit immediately from HLS and from Courier Network, not before giving us their details. He was so disgusted at HLS he had no problem in helping us find the real culprit - Courier Network!

Courier Network within 24 hours had called Israel, and informed their parent company never to send them any HLS parcels to deliver, because they will NEVER deliver to them again!

One of the most interesting companies visited was YUSEN Air and Sea Service a Japanese Freight Company. This company was responsible for the import of chemicals, by their own admission, to HLS - not any more! Yesterday after just 24 hours they too pulled out.

Shamefully DHL who have bought out 3 of the suppliers listed are delivering to HLS. This global company is vast and their are depots everywhere - unless they pull out every single depot and office will become the target of legal and legitimate protest until they too, like ANC (another massive Global delivery company), pull out of HLS !

And not far behind, and to be expected, is UPS! Now who is going to pull out first we wonder - DHL or UPS ? Whose ethical and moral policies are stronger... who's the better company? Let's see shall we, they both got visited yesterday and still we await their replies!

Marken, based in Feltham are a massive player in the courier network for HLS, so much so they were expecting our visit at some point in the future - well the national campaign to close HLS has arived on your doorstep darlings! They later made a statement.

Charles Kendall Freight and Customs Brokerage Ltd weren't so pleased to see us... their involvement in HLS has been proved 100% and they admitted it! No point closing the door in our faces - there are many ways of getting of our message across legally and we will be back to demonstrate against you!

From Mon 11th - Fri 15th Oct BOC's largest shareholder Fidelity held a financial roadshow across the UK. SHAC was there to meet them in Bristol and London.

BAX Global and MENLO Worldwide also were visited, they too were very supportive and didn't believe they were linked to HLS - Well look again! Your time is running out as nice as you were there are animals dying by the day in HLS in their thousands and we haven't got time for you to be irresponsibly slack - make that statement - you know it makes sense!

HLS Supplier conference disrupted - London

Following on from the Japanese embassy stunt, a number of demonstrators successfully disrupted a pharmaceutical conference in London. In attendance were delegates from companies who are customers of HLS.

Following extensive probing operations into the conference facility both the week before and one final hour before the actual stunt took place, a number of activists formed up in the local area of the Hatton Conference Facility, Hatton Gardens, London and made their way toward the conference and the waiting delegates.

The event was being secured by three private guards in suits, one too fat to move and the other two too skinny to force even a mouse out of the building! They obviously took the threat from previous disruptions seriously! So seriously that the conference was being held in the Gold Room of The Hatton facility, tucked right away behind closed and guarded doors on the ground floor. How nice we didn't have to run up any stairs!

Having previously identified the presence of security that day, their routines were observed and their weaknesses identified. The dedicated team of demonstrators made their way down the secure street of Hatton Gardens without a single police officer in sight. Shortly before the entrance to The Hatton, the two activists who had previously been attending a meeting there broke away to cause a distraction to deceive the security guards - now firmly holding the doors closed!

The two activists were welcomed as they re-entered the building, having been recognised from the meeting they had just attended (in order to locate and confirm the correct conference room). All of a sudden one of them fell to the floor feigning a sprained ankle - I told her not to wear heels on a demo! The security guards and receptionists compassionately helped the unknown activist to the seating area, leaving both the main door and the inner door to the Gold Room unguarded!

There were now three activists inside - the others lay in wait just outside the main entrance. The activists inside assembled their air horns and made the dash through the facility past both security doors and right into the conference! Air horns blaring they successfully brought the conference to a standstill! Now they had the full attention of the delegates in the room the activists shouted "You are being warned to stop dealing with Huntingdon Life Sciences, the vile torture laboratory that kills thousands of animals on a daily basis, we know who you are!" The air horns once again filled the air with the salute of defiance as the security guards were now attempting to evict the protestors from the conference.

The delegates were left in no doubt we meant business. They all listened intently (they had no choice) and just stared - completely shocked! Not one of them defended themselves or their companies! Cowards!

As the air horns sounded inside the Gold Room the security guard on the main door rushed away to assist, allowing the hoard of demonstrators waiting patiently outside to flood into the main foyer. Causing total mayhem and wreaking havoc they leafleted the facility and sounded even more air horns in disgust at the Hatton for hosting the pharmaceutical conference. It was a triumphant sight to behold!

Eventually the protestors left. With no police at the scene the three very irrate and upset security guards (I use the term loosely) were becoming angered and aggressive and very red faced indeed! We had completely breached their security and successfully disrupted the conference once again. This clearly demonstrates that no level of enhanced security is effective against dedicated, committed, clever activists that will not allow these companies' support of HLS to go unnoticed and unchallenged! To join this team in more 'spectacular' stunts to come please get in touch.

Security at the Japanese Embassy breached

Recently 15 protestors formed up at Warren St Tube for a demo against the Japanese companies who are customers of HLS. They were met by the customary police guard who blindly followed them as they made their way to Green Park on the tube. Acting as a clever deception plan they waited, & waited, & waited at Green Park, confusing the police, whilst a separate group of protestors silently made their way into the Japanese Embassy itself, past two security checkpoints & into the glass foyer where a Japanese exhibition was being hosted.

As the deception demo made their way to the embassy they struck up with their air horns & megaphones in protest. Predictably the police guarded the doors as the Japanese locked them from inside – but it was to late; we were already in & awaiting our turn to cause mayhem behind closed doors!

The protestors inside struck up shouting "Japanese companies are architects of murder…responsible for the slaughter of 1000's of animals at HLS…"

They continued shouting, disrupting the embassy from within. People & visitors were sent scurrying away. In a panic 8 Japanese officials held the one door to the gallery closed. We thank them for allowing our protest to continue even longer before eventually the police vans arrived. In full siren, they unlocked the doors & the police escorted the protestors out of the building, leaving the Japanese & their security red-faced & completely embarrassed.

An excellent day—"worth a hundred demo's"—no arrests & our point fully made… Thank you to everyone who contributed as part of this successful team stunt.

Recent Liberations. Direct action doesn't come any more direct than this.

Over the past few months there have been several raids on intensive chicken units in the UK resulting in hundreds of chickens going free.

"During the night of July 24th we entered Pampaloni Rolando farm in Fauglia (Pisa), and we left at dawn carrying 210 rabbits with us. This action has been censored by the media, but the photos we are enclosing can be a proof of it.

These animals were probably destined to die in vivisection labs. Pampaloni doesn't like the people to know about his deals with vivisectors. The animals in his barns do not only die brutally in slaughterhouses, killed for the greed of carnivores, but are also victims of animal experimantation, a torture in the name of profit. Vivisection is just a billionaire business, and it must end.
Fronte di Liberazione Animale

May the freedom gained tonight by these animals we now grab happy in our hands give strength to all those imprisoned for their fight against this system based on killings and exploitation.
Solidarity with the activists of Il Silvestre!"

August 11th: Russian ALF activists' attack on station of hunters near to Moscow. Two foxes are released.

In this attack a beagle was rescued from a lab in Spain. What we have brought you here is just a tiny amount of liberations carried out in the past few months.

Hundreds of partridges reared to be shot were released in Hampshire.

News and Views

And they call us violent!

Suffragettes employed every tactic including bombings, arson and damage. This photo is of a bomb attack to release imprisoned comrades.

Yet another anti-HLS action in Utah, USA

SHAC ITALIA GET OUT AND AT 'EM

On wednesday September 22nd about 10 activists decided to have a good day of action against the vivisection industry in the city of Milano, Italy.

First they went to the offices of a company involved with suppliers of Morini farm (breeders for vivisection), finding a reasonable debate that will probably help this company to cease dealing with the farm.

Then the activists decided to demo against companies involved with Huntingdon Life Sciences.

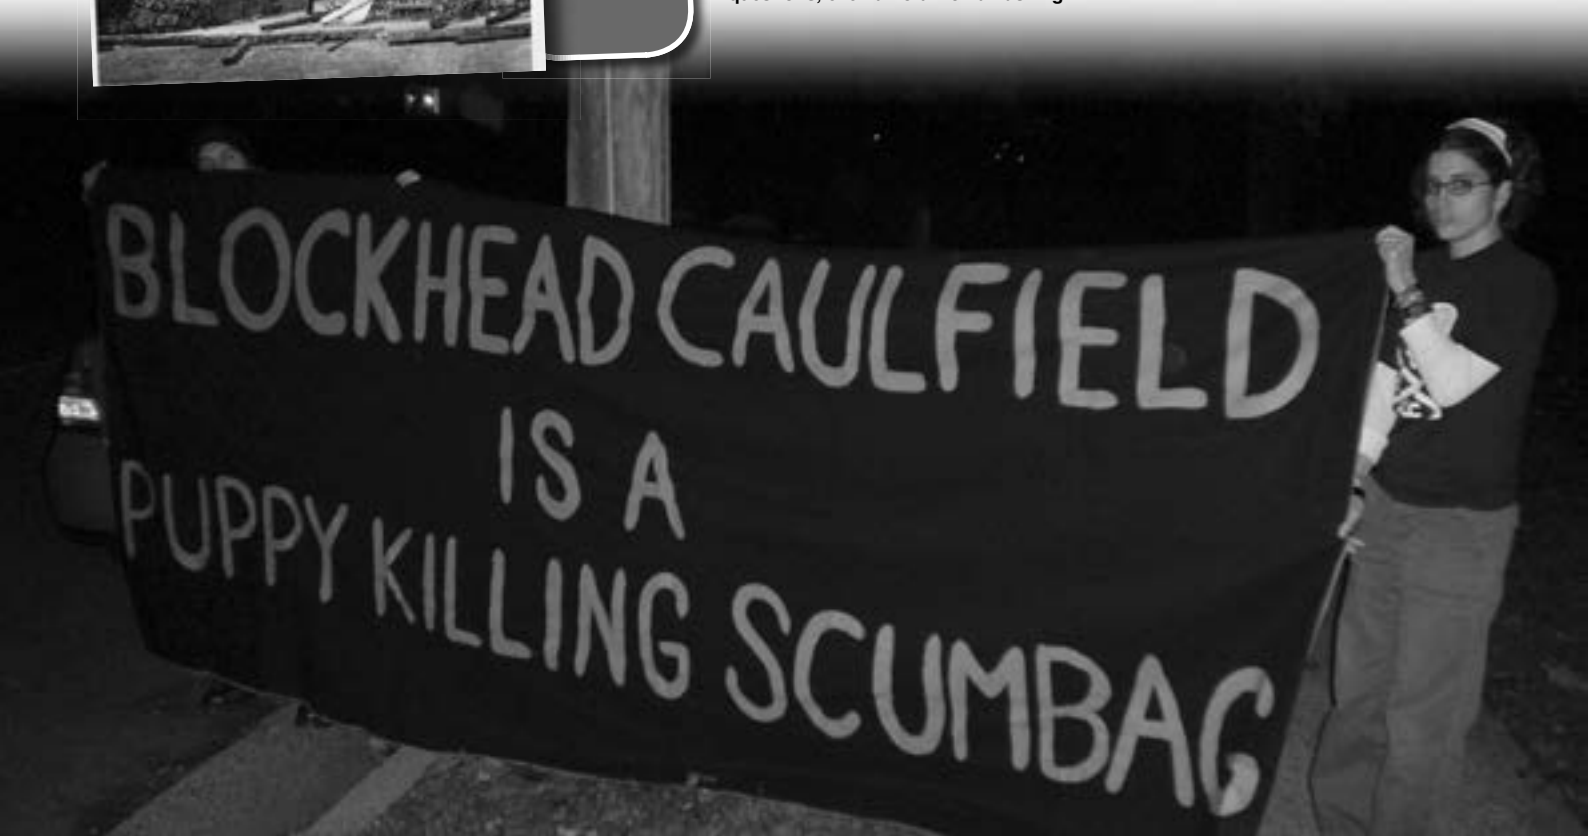

The offices of Chiron Italy have been the site for a really good demo, with a megaphone going and leaflets everywhere, asking them to stop dealing with HLS. Chiron kill all kinds of animals, not only inside HLS, but also in their own labs, and have pushed for the arrests of the Shac7 in the USA. This is the reason we decided targeting them, to show active solidarity with the real victims of terrorisms: both with our non-human friends tortured in labs and our human comrades being harassed and imprisoned by the terrorism of the State and its repressive forces.

The demo continued out of the building, and many people approached asking questions, even an old woman asking if the animals were there, to go and free them herself - that's what normal people think about these companies and the horrors of vivisection.

Third target was an Abbey National branch, major shareholder of BOC, where two activists entered leafleting and explaining them about the connections of Abbey with vivisection inside HLS. Just to learn that in Italy Abbey National has been sold to another bank and has no more branches! They only needed to change their signs! Anyway some people have been informed of the dirty dealings of Abbey, and the bank director said it's a shame for Abbey to be involved with such a company as BOC.

Then a visit was paid to Bank of Tokyo Mitsubishi, a bank with high percentage of shares in different japanese HLS customers. As their office is on the ground floor, with windows on the street, the activists began shouting and demoing at their windows, blowing whistles and exposing them as scum supporting the vivisection industry. Ten minutes of anger expressed loudly.

And it was only for the broken megaphone that more HLS customers couldn't meet this group of activists!"

International demo at Novartis and BOC

Friday 3rd September
27 people from across the world give Novartis a wake up call

A minibusful and 2 other vehicles full of true activists who are angry and determined to STOP animal cruelty marched to the front of Novartis's site in Frimley. With every banner we could get and 10 airhorns, they were told in many different languages what we exactly thought of them. With the sound of the beagles screaming for help and the pure anger which that fuelled, the demo was going to be very loud and vocal. They were a little surprised to say the least and tried to take photos for their family album, maybe so they can show their grandchildren which people were responsible for closing down Huntingdon and stopping horrific suffering of animals.
Novartis if anyone needs reminding were importing wild caught baboons into Huntingdon to be used in the very vicious and fatal xenotransplantation experiments. Most of those beautiful animals who were once running free in the wild with their families were now in the hands of those monsters at Huntingdon who call themselves scientists, undergoing suffering we can't even imagine. Well the 27 people there will never forget and have vowed to keep reminding them of the facts. Novartis you are driven by profit not by science.

After a while Novartis's personal police force (well you would think so) turned up and forced us further away. With cars who thought of turning into their site changing their minds when they saw the anger in our eyes, we were determined to keep up the pressure on them while they still torture animals at Huntingdon.

With everyone back in the vehicles we headed off to Boc at Guildford, well that's what we thought until we saw the road blocked by an army of police. After being told we could not proceed any further we quickly sped off in pursuit of another company nearby. With riot vans and police cars in tow we soon hit the motorway. I guess with no other way of stopping us the riot vans started to aim at us and drive us off the road, now pardon me if I'm wrong but I think that may be illegal. We decided that with so much filth in tow we would head back to base and start again when they had left.

It was great to be with many different nationalities all with one goal and to know that it will be achieved no matter what.

Activists start as they mean to go on

As this was competition week we decided to start early and try to cram in as many demo's as possible. First stop was Wickham Labs. They must have been expecting us as they left the gates open. We had a short but noisy demo and left them in no doubt of the anger we have for this place. We'll be coming back again and again until this hell hole closes down.
Next stop was BOC in Southampton, again this was a short demo but very noisy, they got the full force of our feelings. Do the right thing BOC and dump HLS!
We headed north and decided to visit a few customers of HLS. FIrst up was Johnson and Johnson's in Basingstoke who have been in the news recently concerning their contraception patch which has been linked to the death of 17 people. Another noisy demo telling everybody about Johnson and Johnson's putting profit before animal and human life. Just around the corner was Eli Lilly, another customer who have paid HLS to perform vicious experiments. We had a good demo managing to keep one step ahead of the not so secure security. Last customer of the day was Novartis in Frimley, We'll never forget those wild caught primates you paid HLS to torture and kill in horrific experiments. Last stop of the day was BOC Guildford. Every time we come here we get more and more support. All in all an effective day against those who pay for animals to die and have no regard for human life either.

ABBEY DITCH BOC SHARES
After demonstrations in the UK and Italy, BOC Gases have lost their biggest shareholder Abbey who previously held 5% of the company. Abbey have now disposed of the BOC shares.

Abbey have sent a letter out to supporters saying that they accepted that 'any negative publicity reflects poorly on Abbey' and that 'Abbey prides itself on its ethical and environmental policies and these will be reflected in all future business decisions.'

FUR VICTORY
Some of you will have been on the joint Fur/SHAC demos in London and spent time demonstrating against Zara. Here's some good news:

The multinational textile group Inditex, which owns fashion chain Zara among others, has decided to make all of its 2,064 stores in 52 countries fur free. This will take immediate effect, except in 6 countries where fur will be phased out over the coming weeks, and stock will not be replaced. The company will stop selling all fur in all its shops in the remaining 6 countries by December 31 2004 at the latest.

The decision was taken just 3 days before a planned international day of action against the company which would have been on September 25th. In the UK we had been campaigning against Zara for several months. At the AR2004 international gathering in Kent in September, activists decided to launch an international campaign. Protests had been planned outside Zara shops in over 40 towns and cities throughout Europe and North America.

Taking the fight to Hunt

MARKET MAKERS

A market maker is a business that facilitates a company's quoting on a stock exchange and sets up transactions between a buyer and a seller. Without a market maker, a company would no longer be listed on the NYSE, NASDAQ or the OTCBB. They would be bumped down to the Pink Sheets, perhaps the most embarassing level of trading a company can sink to.

The ongoing campaign against HLS market makers has been one of the most sucessful and fast-paced campaigns. Time after time activists have managed the removal of multiple market makers over the course of 2 years. However one market maker refuses to budge: Legacy Trading Co run by Skip and Mark. Legacy is Huntingdon's main market maker in the USA.

In one of the most embarassing moments of the campaign, Skip was recorded on the phone selling out HLS's "secret" investor so that he could make a buck from selling their shares after we targeted them! He has made it clear that he is not guided by his ethics, stating "if I could make money off of it (child pornography) legally, I would trade its stock".

Contact Skip and Mark and tell them what you think about their lack of morals:

PHONE CALLS

Never underestimate how important your phone calls are to the companies that deal with HLS. So many of the companies who have already severed their ties with HLS (over 70 this year alone!) do so because of your phone calls. We hand you the information on a plate via this newsletter and the SHAC website and then it's up to you. What is very important is to phone the companies when it is their day on the Diary Dates. They can literally receive hundreds of calls on these days, all from individuals making just one call to express their concerns. It really does make a difference. Ask yourself how many calls to how many companies have you made today? We should all be contacting these people every day. There are always new ones that the SHAC sleuths have cunningly discovered and of course there are the stubborn ones such as Phenomenex who have admitted they don't care about the cruelty at HLS.

EMAILS

If you have access to the internet you can email these supporters of animal torture. Again we provide the information that you need but there is still nothing to stop you doing a little bit of your own research. Don't forget we have an email action alert list that tells you who to contact and what is important as far as the campaign is concerned.

LETTERS

Good old-fashioned letters. You can't beat them! We always like to receive copies of any letters you send and any replies you might receive. Imagine if you are running a business and you receive sackloads of letters from concerned members of the public. Imagine also if all of those letters are from different people expressing their disgust and anger at this company's involvement with a disgusting laboratory such as Huntingdon Life Sciences.

With all of the above we ask you to be polite. The communication should be articulate and to the point. A promise not to do business with the company, and that you will tell others not to, works wonders.

MAKE A PLEDGE WITH YOURSELF TODAY THAT YOU WILL TAKE ACTION AND BE THEIR VOICE EVERY DAY. IF YOU DON'T, WHO WILL?

DEMONSTRATIONS

I have lost count of the number of companies who have made a statement severing their links with HLS after just one simple, peaceful demonstration. It may not seem like it at times but we are allowed to demonstrate. We are out doing demonstrations a few days a week and arrests are extremely rare so please don't let that put you off. Remember the demonstrations are highly effective and a brilliant way to meet like-minded people. Recently we did 12 suppliers in one day and 4 pulled out within hours as a result with others following suit shortly afterwards. Don't be shy because everyone there is just like you and you will always have a warm welcome from us. We will bring all the banners and leaflets. All you need to bring is yourself.

Remember every second of every day those animals are in fear and pain. It haunts me that at night they are left alone in the dark dreading the footsteps in the morning. What we are asking from you is not very much. The more you do the quicker it closes and we would never ask you to do anything that didn't work. Enough is enough. Do it for them.

Taking that phone call global

It used to be that making international phone calls was very expensive, but that is no longer true. There are many companies now offering simple and cheap services that allow you to take your message global. Huntingdon and its customers think they can hide in America, Europe and Japan, but it is now no more expensive than it was to ring them in the UK.

In shops, adverts and on the internet you will find a whole host of companies offering cheap phonecalls. They work in a variety of different ways, but the principle is the same for most of them, bypassing BT to bring you a cheaper service.

* You ring a national rate number and then the international number you want to reach, following the prompts on the way.

* You get a voucher or phone card which credits you with so many minutes of phone calls to a given country. These cards are often advertised in shop windows, or can be bought from the Post Office.

* You set up an account with one of these companies so all you have to do is prefix a simple code in front of the telephone number you want to call every time you dial from home. Generally only works with home landlines.

Some of these processes will work from phone boxes, and many will help improve on your anonymity. Many of these companies can also be found by doing a quick search for "cheap international phone calls" on the Internet.

So basically, dialing an extra number and following a few commands can give you cheap access to animal abusers across the globe at costs that can be even cheaper than doing it through your BT line at home.

For example to ring the US from a pay-phone, or home, try the dial4discount.com approach by ringing 0844 5 99 88 77, waiting for the prompt and then entering in the number you want to contact, including the 00 (the international telephone number prefix). You don't have any bills to pay other than what you put into the phonebox, and you can keep at it, reaching people in the US from as little as 3p a minute until your money runs out.

To ring the US from the UK using a Post Office voucher at 4p per minute (with by the second billing), simply purchase a £5 voucher from the Post Office. Call the access number on the back of the card from a UK telephone. At the prompt, enter the PIN (Personal Identification Number) on the back of the card. At the next voice prompt, dial the number you wish to call.

SUPPORT THE MORINI CAMPAIGN

The Morini campaign in Italy against a disgusting farm that breeds puppies for vivisection is going really well. As there are no companies in the UK related to Morini, you can send e-mails, faxes or phone calls, asking for Mrs Rita Morini who is the only person speaking English there. Thank you!
Here are the addresses:
E-mail: info@stefanomorini.com
E-mail stefano_morini@libero.it

Phone: 0039-0522-873424
Fax: 0039-0522-873424

Some services such as the Post Office will incur extra costs of 19p a minute if used from a phonebox, but it still works out way cheaper using this method. Some services can also be used from mobiles, though mobile operators may chuck on extras costs as well.

So, there you go. It doesn't get easier, so there is no reason why someone on the other side of the world cannot get the message that you find them dealing with HLS despicable.

Majority of GPs now question the scientific worth of animal tests, with 82% worried for their patients' safety

Patient advocacy group Europeans For Medical Advancement commissioned a survey of 500 General Practitioners, conducted by TNS Healthcare (www.tns-global.com) between 5th - 17th August 2004. The company, which has many large pharmaceutical clients, selected the GPs so as to ensure a thorough demographic and geographical UK spread. The results show a staggering level of distrust in results obtained from animal experiments:

82% were concerned that animal data can be misleading when applied to humans.
Only 21% would have more confidence in animal tests for new drugs than in a battery of human-based safety tests.

This confirms what Europeans For Medical Advancement suspected - that a silent majority of doctors today are aware that animal tests are not the safety net the public and the medical profession are frequently assured they are by the government and the pharmaceutical industry.

In fact, there is evidence that testing new drugs and treatments for human disease on animals endangers human health and safety. For example, hormone replacement therapy increases women's risk of heart disease and stroke, even though studies in monkeys predicted the opposite. Aidsvax failed to protect 8,000 volunteers from HIV, even though it protected chimpanzees. Dozens of treatments for stroke have tested safe and effective in animals in recent years but patients have been injured or killed by all of them. Please see www.curedisease.com for many more examples.

The clinical relevance of animal research requires urgent evaluation, a fact now accepted amongst the medical profession but not by the government, which "has not commissioned or evaluated any formal research on the efficacy of animal experiments and has no plans to do so".*A paper published in the BMJ on 28th February 2004 asked "Where is the evidence that animal research benefits humans?" If such evidence cannot be found, the practice should cease. Patients will benefit because they will no longer be damaged by misleading data, and also because the resources currently pouring into animal research will be freed for clinical research.

"An independent, transparent and public evaluation of the scientific value of animal experiments is clearly overdue. My medical colleagues have long been frustrated by the Establishment's refusal to debate this issue openly. We believe they must now do so. Today, we are studying disease on the molecular level, where differences between species make mistakes inevitable. Today, medicine is much more evidence-based and it is time to weigh the real harm from animal experiments against the alleged benefits."

Lib Dem Shadow Environment Secretary Norman Baker MP said:
"This is an important survey result which rightly questions the extent to which it is safe to rely on extrapolated results from animal tests. There needs to be a debate about this matter, rather than the sterile one which the media has created, artificially juxtaposing "animal extremists" with "men in white coats". It is wrong to suggest, as the media does all too often, that the scientific and medical community is all in favour of experiments on animals, and that they all feel safe with extrapolating the results. They aren't, and they don't."

1) Does it concern you that animal data can be misleading when applied to humans? 82% yes, 8% no, 10% don't know

2) Today there are many sophisticated methods of testing drug safety, including pharmacogenetic studies using DNA chips, virtual human metabolic prediction programmes and micro-dosing studies where volunteers are monitored with PET and other scanners. Would you have more confidence in a battery of these human-based tests than in data from animal tests? 51% yes, 21% no, 28% don't know

3) Would you support an independent scientific evaluation of the clinical relevance of animal experimentation? 83% yes, 8% no, 10% don't know

Europeans For Medical Advancement is a mainstream science-based non-profit research and educational institute dedicated to improving human health by modernising biomedical research. We oppose animal experimentation, based on overwhelming scientific evidence that findings from animal models cannot be reliably extrapolated to humans. Far from helping us, animal experiments directly harm people, divert funds from genuinely useful research methods and are a major obstacle to medical progress today. See www.curedisease.com <http://www.curedisease.com>

Dr Greek is co-author of three books on the human costs of animal experiments: Sacred Cows and Golden Geese (Continuum, 2000); Specious Science (Continuum, 2002) and What Will We Do If We Don't Experiment on Animals? Medical Research for the 21st Century (Trafford, 2004) - all available from [redacted]

£33 billion wiped off shares in drug giants

MORE than £33 billion has been wiped off the value of the world's ten biggest drug makers in the past week as fears grow that regulators might force the industry to suspend all work on a new class of anti-inflammatory medicines.

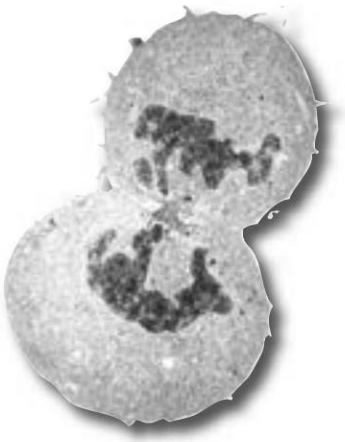

Drug stocks in London, Europe and America suffered another tumultuous day as mounting concerns over the long-term viability of drugs known as Cox-2 inhibitors raised questions over the ability of Big Pharma to bring new medicines to market.

The fears follow a decision by Merck last week to pull Vioxx, one of its best selling drugs, off the chemist's shelves after it emerged that the arthritis treatment might have been responsible for up to 7,000 fatal heart attacks over three years.

The European Medicines Agency, which is undertaking an emergency two-week review of the class of drugs to which Vioxx belongs, refused to rule out the possibility that other Cox-2 inhibitors will face suspension while more tests are carried out.

In America, The New England Journal of Medicine ran an editorial from Dr Eric Topol of the Cleveland Clinic in Ohio, calling for a congressional hearing into the safety of Cox-2 drugs. Dr Topol, a heart specialist, criticised Merck executives and the leadership at the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) for not taking 'appropriate action' in the interest of public health.

'Sadly, it is clear to me that Merck's commercial interest in Vioxx sales exceeded its concern about the drug's potential cardiovascular toxicity'. The article suggests that damaging side-effects might apply to all drugs in the class.

Some of you may have noticed that we have stopped doing the science leaflets. The simple reason is that there is a doctors' group called Europeans for Medical Advancement who produce better information. EFMA are headed by Dr. Ray Greek who himself is a former vivisector but now tours the world lecturing and arguing the case against vivisection on scientific grounds.

EFMA produce a whole range of leaflets and reports and we strongly urge anyone to order their leaflets and give them out far and wide to get the scientific mesage across. Their website is also well worth a look.

Age 51

The card in the supermarket advertised: 'Cute, six week old, sad-eyed labrador-cross needs a good home. Only £5.' It was love at first sight. Through her I have learned so much , especially how to give and receive unconditional love. I believe there was a reason she and I were destined to meet. That reason was to become clear to me years later.....On 18th March, my world fell apart. At the Living Without Cruelty Exhibition in Kensington I signed a petition but didn't walk away quickly enough from the stall. What I heard and turned around to see will remain with me for the rest of my life. Tiny puppies being punched in the face, screamed at by demented workers. The sounds of their cries will haunt me forever. Even now every time I hear their cries a part of me withers and dies. What I saw that day has completely and absolutely changed me and my perspective on every single thing in life. I no longer worry or fret about the little things in life because I know which direction my life is going in. Every single issue in life pales into insignificance when faced with the horrors going on behind the sound-proofed walls of HLS. I cried so much for those poor animals at the mercy of those monsters inside HLS. Eventually my tears turned to anger and a feeling of absolute helplessness. I I contacted Shac and other animal rights organisations to learn as much as I could about what other activists were doing. I started to attend demos, help out on stalls, and inform the public. I gained confidence. Courage, staying focused and an unflinching belief in what you are doing is paramount. I never lose sight of what it is I am fighting against and what I am fighting for. I can never forget the images I have seen, the noises I have heard and the terrible cruelties I have read about. During my four years of campaigning I have met some truly amazing people; real human beings who are not afraid to speak out against the evil that is vivisection and who will stop at nothing to fight for the animals inside Huntingdon Life Sciences. Wonderful individuals who have been involved in the movement for many years and have sacrificed so much to dedicate their entire lives to speaking up for abused animals and to expose the truth. Their dedication, determination and courage never ceases to humble me.

When I heard about Jill Phipps being killed and the live exports of calves, being transported for long hours in cramped lorries, without food and water it so horrified me that I became vegan. I knew then that I had to get involved in stopping this and all animal cruelty.

Through a friend I heard about the SHAC march in Oxford 3 years ago. I went on the mini bus with other animal rights people and from then on I became more and more involved with Shac, Speac Cambridge campaign and now the Speak campaign in Oxford. I have been arrested 5 times, for the most silly and trivial reasons with no convictions so far. This only makes me more determined to carry on.

Once you start campaigning for animals rights, it takes over your life and becomes the most important thing in your life. I have been a cat lover all my life and have 8 cats of my own and have fostered cats for the cats protection league. So when I heard about the terrible experiments on cats, giving kittens electric shocks when they try to feed off their mother. Sewing kittens eyelids shut and sealing a cat in a bell jar and watching it to see how long it took to die. This particularly motivates me to work against vivisection even more. It doesn't matter how old you are, I happen to be in my fifties. We all work together for the abolition of all animal cruelty.

My name is Sheila. I have been in the animal rights movement for about 15 years, and I am a vegan. It was purely by chance that I stumbled upon an animal rights stall in Northampton. Jim Buckner who has been trying to stop live exports for many many years had leaflets advertising a live export march in Gloucester. I had never seen Jim before and I have never seen him there since, so it must have been fate. I went on this march and I was hooked on trying to help animals. It was something I had wanted to do, but didn't know how to go about it.

I have been arrested several times, and it is now second nature, and we brag about how many times we have been arrested for the cause! I would add that all my cases have been dropped as they were based on lies and trivialities, the latest being for banging a drum in Rugby!

I am still committed to trying to stop animal cruelty in any shape or form, and I suppose in relation to vivisection it is because I will never forget the sound of the beagles crying out in agony in Huntingdon Life Sciences when the most horrendous cruelty was exposed on Channel 4 in 1997. The vile technicians had pumped their bodies with chemicals and were trying to take blood samples from veins too small to enter, and because the beagles were struggling the HLS technicians were caught on camera punching, shaking and swearing at these tiny creatures. Other technicians, who were not taken to court, (what a surprise!!) were laughing at all this going on as they thought it was a huge joke. I will never forgive them or forget this, and the screaming of those puppies will be in my mind forever, and let us never forget that these puppies are still crying out for our help.

My picture of the tiny newborn monkey called Britches who was featured in the previous SHAC magazine keeps me focused and ready for battle against the laboratory terrorists, because that is what they are. The story of Britches is a prime example of the futile, barbaric, dark ages experiments being carried out in laboratories worldwide. To stitch up a newborn baby's eyes, give her a pole as a surrogate mum, and then give her an electric shock every time she cuddled it is unbelievably sick. Happily this monkey was rescued and is now living her life out free from pain and suffering, but we must not forget all the other Britches trapped in laboratories.

Animal rights people are wonderful people who will do anything for anybody for no renumeration, and I am proud to be part of this movement. I want to see serious money put into non-animal testing, and my ambition is to go down in history as someone who exposed the fraudulent vivisection industry, fought against it and won.

Welfare Activities..... A Lifelong Interest

Maternal example has been an important factor in my concern for animal welfare. I shall soon be 84 years old. When I was young I remember how my father used to hide away pictures of animal experiments which came to our home. If my mother saw them it used to make her unwell for days. The medics call that psychosomatic illness. On cold winter days she would do door to door collecting for the PDSA and the RSPCA. During the Second World War she became an 'animal warden' under the NARPAC scheme, The National Air Raid Precautions for Animals Committee. Every pet animal in the district was registered, so that, if bombing caused it to flee in distress, it might be reunited with its owner.

For much of my life I too shared the horror of looking at animal experimentation pictures. I tried to cope with this by involving myself in various voluntary human welfare activities such as the family service units which help problem families by living in their neighbourhood. I became the assistant warden of a boarding house for men just released from prison, and then for a three year period became a personal attendant to an infirm aunt in Leigh-on-Sea. After her death I worked as a full-time meals-on-wheels driver and deliverer. After breaking a leg I helped at a club in Leigh-on-Sea for isolated psychiatric patients living in bedsits in the borough of Southend. When this club was wound down, the animal welfare urges of my childhood reasserted themselves. I overcame my retiring nature and began to collect money in public places in the borough for the RSPCA and the PDSA. Then came signature collecting for animal welfare petitions. For a long time I was a lone figure.

On 5th March 1992 I attended an Animal Aid meeting in Southend. There were demonstrations on how to prepare vegetarian and vegan meals, followed by a video presentation of the horrors of factory farming. I became first a vegetarian and then a vegan, and joined the local Animal Aid group. No longer was I a lone figure but took part in protests of many kinds whenever transport facilities were available. In due course I learned the significance of names such as Brightlingsea, Dover, Shamrock and Hillgrove farms, the West country sanctuaries of the LACS and, of course the various laboratories of Huntingdon Life Sciences.

May I try to extract some meaning from the foregoing patchwork of experiences ? When you, the reader, are handing out leaflets bearing distressing pictures and wording, do not automatically pour scorn on passers-by who try to avoid accepting them. They may be in full agreement, but find the emotional upheaval which the leaflets cause too great to cope with....at that stage in their lives. They may, like me, become "late developers".

Public Consultation On Bury Green Farm Redevelopment

East Herts Council is to consult with local people on how they would like to see Bury Green Farm redeveloped.

At the Executive meeting last week, members discussed a development brief on the future of the former GlaxoSmith-Kline site at Bury Green Farm, on the north-western side of Bury Green village.

The draft brief will be put out for public consultation from Monday, October 4 and the responses will help guide future development decisions on the site.

Local residents, the Parish Council, the Environment Agency and other statutory bodies will be asked for their thoughts on the proposals during the six-week consultation period, which ends on November 15, 2004.

The 14.2 acre site was previously owned and managed by GlaxoSmithKline (GSK) for more than 50 years but currently lies vacant under new ownership after GSK announced the closure of its animal breeding and licensed experimental facility buildings in 2002. It is surrounded by 165 acres of farmland, not forming part of the development brief.

The new owners, Romehold Ltd, a property investment company, have co-operated with officers of East Herts Council in producing the draft brief. It proposes:

· An area of modern farm buildings within the Conservation area would be redeveloped to provide new rural housing and open space. The majority of the animal buildings be either retained in current use· The site moves into Class B1 Business Use, subject to traffic considerations.

Hedley Banks, Deputy Leader of East Herts Council, said: "The development brief is a discussion document at this stage. We want to get as many views as possible over the consultation period from local people on what they would like and what they wouldn't wish to see here. The site has huge potential and we look forward to receiving the public's responses."

The draft brief can be viewed at the council offices in Wallfields (Hertford) and The Causeway (Bishop's Stortford) and at Bishop's Stortford Library, 6 The Causeway from Monday, October 4. The draft brief can also be viewed from that date on the council's website www.eastherts.gov.uk

In the emerging Local Plan, the council proposes that the site should be designated as a Major Development Site (MDS) in the Rural Area Beyond the Green Belt (RABGB).

We need to stop this.

Mr. Banks is the Cllr who is insisting in the Mercury newspaper that the brief document should go out to the public "without being amended at the moment" ie that the "preferred use" would be for animal breeding and testing.
