"We never give in and we always win."

BUSINESS AS USUAL

Also inside full details on HLS shareholders, Global demos, SHAC Europe v Novartis, March against the Money Men and more.

BUSINESS

As many of you will be aware, on May 1st 2007, 32 arrests were made in relation to the SHAC campaign. These arrests were made following a two year operation, involving 700 police officers across several countries, and with FBI involvement.

What a coup for the vivisection industry! Or not. The SHAC campaign has continued as strongly as ever, as you can see throughout this newsletter. All these raids have served to do is to unite the global movement like never before.

SHAREHOLDER SHAKEDOWN

In the period before and after the raids, Huntingdon and the police have been trying to reassure companies that the SHAC campaign has been crushed. At one recent protest, an disgruntled manager was heard to mutter, "The police said this would all be finished".

On the day of the raids Huntingdon's share price did increase, but only by three dollars. It would appear that investors aren't quite as stupid as HLS would like to think.

As this newsletter clearly demonstrates, the campaign against Huntingdon is far from over. In fact, we see this as a crucial period in the fight against the hell hole. The recent raids happened for a reason: WE ARE WINNING!

In order to send Huntingdon's share price back down where it belongs, we have targeted key shareholders. Within a week of us announcing the new share holder targets, the German bank Dresdner dumped nearly 600,000 HLS shares and a short time later, LaGrange Capital Administration followed suit.

Infact, until the day before this newsletter went to print, over the page are the details of companies who had invested in the animal cruelty at HLS.

As an incredible testiment to the SHAC campign, all of these companies have now dropped their shares in Huntingdon Life Sciences.

As well as Dresdner and LeGrange; Robeco, Deutsche Bank and Fairfield Grenwich Associates have all cut their ties to HLS.

SHAC is as active, as determined and as effective as ever.

THIS IS NO TIME FOR WHINING, THIS IS THE TIME FOR WINNING!

LOOK THEM IN THE EYES AND TELL THEM YOU DON'T CARE!

Take a look at these adorable guinea pigs. They were rescued from a Russian laboratory, and are now living free from cruelty and abuse at the hands of vivisectors.

It is because of animals like these, and the 70,000 trapped inside HLS right now that we will not stop until the gates of that hell hole close once and for all.

The SHAC campaign stops when Huntingdon stops, it's that simple.

AS USUAL

These three campaigners have been put on remand following the raids, accused of running a lawful campaign. Please take time to write a letter of support, and donations are appreciated (make all cheques payable to 'The Governor' and write the prisoner's name and number on the back.).

Heather Nicholson (VM4859)
HMP Bronzefield, Woodthorpe Road, Ashford, Middx , TW15 3JZ.

First of all thank you so much to all of you who have written, visited, donated and kept on campaigning. You make all the difference to prisoners' lives. This situation is a bit of a test for the whole movement. Some actions by the police are obviously designed to disrupt and spread 'fear'.

Well we are not afraid so neither should any one else be. So far many of you have done the animals proud and kept their hope alive. The way I see it any attack on us is actually an attack on the animals themselves. Why on earth the police, Government, and HLS should hate these animals so much is beyond me and I won't waste any energy trying to fathom it out. The police etc. are sadly mistaken if they think it is only those of us in prison who want an end to animal cruelty and for HLS to close.

I know I've said it before but they can't touch me and they cant hurt me personally no matter what they do because my heart has already been broken millions of times by every single act of cruelty, murder, torture, terrorism and violence against animals. Every break has made me many times stronger. Be thankful that you are in a position to do so much more than I can. Be thankful that you can speak out for and defend those beautiful animals who have ended up in the hands of the cowards, thugs and bullies who work at HLS. Please use every opportunity open to you to be effective. My love, admiration and total respect to all of you who refuse to give in. The spotlight must never leave HLS and their supporters. It's up to you now.

HMP Bronzefield, Woodthorpe Road, Ashford, Middx , TW15 3JZ.

Hi Everyone,

I'm back in the gym here at Bronzefield and aiming for new fitness goals. I miss Gregg all day everyday but am strong in spirit as always. It is really good to hear that it is business as usual as far as SHAC is concerned. Whatever happens, we must not yield to governments, police forces and global companies who are conspiring against this movement at the highest level. We must fight them every step of the way, for what they seek to prevent is dissent in any shape or form.

The movement they seek to reduce us to, is a neutralised and ineffective one and their agenda is clear: arrest and imprison a handful of people in the UK and the USA and all this will stop. There are only a few of us in jail and many hundreds of you still out there and free to carry on the campaign against Huntingdon Life Sciences. You have a legal, democratic right to protest and that right has been hand-earned throughout history. You have every right to contact companies and inform them about the disgusting, shocking cruelty and incompetence exposed at HLS six times now. You have every right to demonstrate at companies and highlight their involvement and investments in the brutal, cold-blooded mass murder carried out daily behind the razor wire at HLS. So do not even let them tell you different. HLS can and will be closed down.

As a director of one of their ex-customers said recently: "We in the industry know that it is not a matter of if HLS closes, it is a matter of when."

Good luck and keep up the fight.

STOP HUNTINGDON ANIMAL CRUELTY

SHAREHOLDER SH

Deutsche Bank thought that they could get away with buying shares in Huntingdon Life Sciences. Animals are dying on their cage floors right now inside HLS and this company think they can make a quick buck out of it.

Lets remember, this is SHAC and if you want to deal with Huntingdon Life Sciences we will be there to stand up and fight for the animals.

THE CAMPAIGN IN 5 MINUTES

Huntingdon Life Sciences are Europe's largest animal testing lab. HLS kill, maim and mutilate 500 animals every single day. Huntingdon are the most exposed animal testing lab in the world, with six undercover investigations spanning from 1989 to 2006.

It is legal in a UK laboratory to burn, electrocute, starve, shoot and poison animals. Your MP & the RSPCA have no right of access to any UK lab and section 24 of the Animal Scientific Procedures Act 1986 states that if anyone publicises what they have seen inside any UK lab they can be imprisoned for up to two years.

Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty was formed in 1999 to close Huntingdon Life Sciences with the focus on Huntingdon's finances. Because of the successes SHAC have had against Huntingdon's financial backers, HLS at present do not have a banker or an insurance company.

The UK government with taxpayers' money acts as both. Huntingdon are $91 million in debt and many global companies have dropped HLS including HSBC (the world's second largest bank), Lloyds TSB, Barclays, Royal Bank of Scotland/Natwest, UBS (the world's largest private bank), Marsh (the world's largest insurance broker) and Citigroup (the world's largest financial institution) to name just a few of the many hundreds of companies who have severed links with Huntingdon.

The targets in this newsletter are in three categories. The first are shareholders in HLS. The second is Huntingdon's customers who contract experiments at Huntingdon. The third is companies who supply Huntingdon with goods and services.

The best way of keeping up to date with all the demos against Huntingdon is on our website www.shac.net. Full lists of Huntingdon's customers & suppliers are also on the website as are all the details and video footage from the six exposes mentioned at the top.

So want to help the animals? Then help SHAC.

A CLOSER LOOK AT 12 COMPANIES

The companies listed here are each and every one vital to HLS's existence. The customers listed are giving HLS significant amounts of work and the courier companies listed are their key ones. Contact them all politely and ask them how they can justify dealing with HLS.

Spotlight on Dangerous Goods Management

When we first caught out Dangerous Goods Management dealing with Huntingdon in August of last year they were just too eager to stop dealing with them, nothing out of the ordinary there you may think? After all this is Huntingdon Life Sciences we are talking about here.

But this is the very same DGM who are up to their necks in animal cruelty. They said they had only dealt with Huntingdon once and wouldn't again but we do our homework at SHAC and we know for a fact that if you were to name the vivisection department of any major UK university the chances are Dangerous Goods management are dealing with them.

So of course it came as little surprise when documents were leaked to us detailing DGMs continued dealings with HLS. Well DGM, you thought you could outsmart SHAC? Where have we heard that before? You thought that you could ship 1020 monkey slides to LG Life Sciences in Korea and no-one would find out, you thought wrong!

Prior to the UK SHAC raids, law enforcement in the USA decided to try and clamp down on SHAC USA.

Six defendants were rounded up and eventually, along with SHAC USA as an organisation, were found guilty of multiple federal felonies for their alleged role in simply campaigning to close down Huntingdon Life Sciences.

The recent UK raids are clearly part of the general plan to smash this (legal) campaign, an observation supported by the fact that the FBI were involved in the UK raids.

Hmm... maybe its just me, but have the UK police been watching things over the pond?

Far from destroying the campaign, everything seems to have carried on, same as it ever was.

But don't just take our word for it, the United Press International ran an article just days after the UK raids, entitled, "Analysis: Animal Activists Persist in US." The article read:

"Despite the FBI's efforts and a new law passed at the end of last year that allows for stiffer penalties, illegal animal-rights activity seems to be carrying on largely unabated... Animal-rights activists have been carrying out other legal protests as well as vandalism of labs, facilities and even the homes of executives of pharmaceutical firms. Jacquie Calnan, president of Americans for Medical Progress, a group in Alexandria, Va., that is supported by the pharmaceutical industry, told UPI she hasn't done a quantitative analysis but hasn't seen a decrease in the activities of animal-rights activities or an increase in arrests or prosecutions. "I haven't noticed any higher or lower level," Calnan said, "It's pretty much a continuum of where we were last year."

11 BEAGLES LIBERATED IN GERMANY

DOES THIS LOOK NORMAL?

Well would your look at this? These pictures were taken at the home of a UCLA vivisector. UCLA are a notorious primate research facility in the USA, who are the centre of a concerted campaign.

And judging by the liberal police response, it seems their campaign is hitting all the right notes. I don't know, don't these cops realise they're doing our job for us?!

NUMBER 1 THREAT TO EU BUSINESS

Earlier this year, a State Department Security briefing was heard in the USA. The briefing was for US companies with overseas operations, and it highlighted the animal rights movement as a major threat in Western Europe and the US.

A representative from a US State Department stated the following during a Power Point presentation to the Overseas Security Advisory Council:

"Although incidents relating to terrorism are most likely to make the front page news, animal rights extremism is what's most likely to affect your day-to-day business operations in Western Europe."

Well, we're lovely when you get to know us, honest! It just shows we must be doing something right, when multi-national companies sit up and take notice at industry conferences!

MAIL ON SUNDAY SHOCKER!

Possible culprits named by the Mail on Sunday for the recent Foot and Mouth outbreak included 'terrorists'. As we go to press it seems that the Pirbright animal research laboratory is to blame. So, for once, the Mail has got something right!

WHINING AND DINING

Speaking of industry conferences, this spring saw the Biotechnology Industry Organisation conference.

Previously this conference has been hosted in Philadelphia and Chicago, but after being hounded in previous years they decided to hold it in Boston where... they were hounded.

Whilst those inside the conference moaned and whined about the "threat" of animal rights campaigns, outside, those very campaigns were taking to the streets.

30 campaigners started the show, holding a protest outside of the home of the Chairman of the Board for the NYSE. Once the ball was rolling, protests continued at the homes and offices of Merck, Novartis, Transmolecular (who were unfortunate enough to be the local HLS customer), and at various BIO 2007 related events.

No rest for the wicked 'ey?

I WAS A VIVISECTIONIST

Taken from the Guardian newspaper:

"It all started when I was an undergraduate doing a medical degree. We were introduced to it gently; we started by watching videos of experiments on anaesthetised rabbits and recording the results. Later we carried out experiments on frogs' legs and then hearts. We took it seriously, and 15 years later I still remember the physiological principles we learned in those experiments. So it all seemed worthwhile.

When I started my research degree, I had to go on a course about how to look after animals under anaesthesia and how to kill them humanely. Animal experiments are highly regulated in Britain; you need a licence from the Home Office and have to take exams and practical tests to prove your competence. The course was frightening. We watched a video on how to kill animals - masked people in lab coats smacking animals over the side of a table or breaking their necks - and then we calmly discussed ethics, as if it all made sense. The trouble was, it didn't - but I must have missed the bit where we were encouraged to question that. When I started in the research lab, it was my turn to do the deed. We were closely supervised and there wasn't any pressure to kill animals unless we were confident we could do it properly. But it didn't seem right to do the experiments without doing the killing as well. I could feel the guinea pig's heart racing when I picked him up; he wasn't the only one who was nervous. And then I did it. I hit his head over the side of a table to stun him, then cut his throat so he'd bleed to death. The sound of skull hitting table will never leave me; 10 years on, I still flinch if I hear a similar noise.

In some laboratories, the psychological damage that this technique inflicts on staff is recognised, and animals are injected with a fatal dose of anaesthetic instead. But this is far more distressing to the animal and can damage the tissue on which you want to experiment. So we hit them over the head and live with the sound of cracking skulls. It soon got easier. What had shocked me at first was suddenly very normal and mundane. Cracking guinea pigs over the back of the head, then slitting their throats really didn't affect me any more. And it didn't seem to affect anyone else either. Colleagues told me it was a perfectly natural coping strategy, that you just couldn't do it unless you'd rationalised it in your head. Friends assumed I must be doing some desperately worthy medical research in order to justify such behaviour, and that I was about to discover the cure for HIV or heart disease. The truth is, research can be a very hit and miss affair, and sometimes it is only hindsight that allows us to judge what were the useful discoveries.

Meanwhile, the building I was working in was under siege by anti-vivisectionists. A prominent animal rights campaigner was in jail and on hunger strike. His supporters had circulated a list of academics they said they would kill in revenge if the hunger striker died. We were surrounded by steel fences and stern-faced policemen on horses. The departmental car had a mirror on a pole, so you could check underneath it for bombs. But sometimes having an enemy to unite against makes it easier not to question what you're doing. And once you're that involved, it's difficult to get out. When I had done my three-year research degree, I left. I had become someone who thought it was normal to kill animals on a daily basis and not be affected by it, which was somehow not really the person I wanted to be.

It was a year after I'd finished before I picked up a guinea pig again. It was one of those really hairy ones whose front end looks the same as its tail end. I didn't tell its owner what I used to do. I had an irrational fear that I would suddenly flip and smack the poor animal over the head. I didn't, but I had to hide the fact that my hands were shaking when I put him down again."

MARCH AGAINST THE MONEY MEN

Around 120 activists met in the heart of the City of London to send a loud and clear signal to the top investors and financial institutions that Huntingdon Life Sciences' shares are a bad investment morally and financially. A loud and vibrant march with megaphones, drums whistles then made its way through the heart of the square mile, directly past some of the most influential institutions and businesses in the City.

After a noisy and passionate rally, the protest split into three groups. Group one stayed in the City and held protests at key HLS and NYSE Euronext investors and shareholders. Group two went to Glaxo and Abbott Labs, while the third group made their way north to hold a protest at the gates of HLS's main site near Alconbury.

SHAC EUROPE + NOVARTIS =

IF IT WASN'T FOR THESE PEOPLE THES

Dr. Joe Harris

Following on closely from being refused early release I've just heard I am 'unsuitable' for transfer to a lower security prison.

This ties in with the recent experiences of other UK animal rights prisoners; the Newchurch and SHAC prisoners were unsuccessful in their appeals against sentence length and three other SHAC activists have recently been remanded.

All the prisoners' addresses are posted on www.vpsg.org, and even a postcard with a short message can really brighten up a prisoners day =)

On a personal level though it's nowhere near all doom and gloom and I'm still positively positive =) I'm hard at work in the prison laundry, operating the tumble dryers amongst the killers and dealers.

I'm keeping fit in the gym and the highlight of my week is running on Sunday mornings, I'm like a dog waiting for it's walkies when that comes around.

I've got a gang of friendly ducks outside my window, have seen an enormous worm in the exercise yard, am getting on well with my fellow convicts and have a headful of hopes, dreams and memories to fill the hours of tedium. =)

Prison is making me mentally and physically stronger and I'm just hoping I've not forgotten how to skateboard by the time I'm let out!

On behalf of the animals and myself, I send a massive thank you to all of you.

Stay safe and take care.

Dr. Joe x

In December 2005, US government agents carried out a nationwide sweep of arrests, charging fourteen individuals with actions claimed by the Earth Liberation Front and/or Animal Liberation Front in the Northwestern U.S. dating back to the mid-90's.

Despite no injury caused to any living being, a judge determined that some of the actions constituted "terrorism" under Federal Sentencing Guidelines.

Disclaimer

This newsletter is not intended to encourage illegal activity of any kind. SHAC's intent is to close down HLS by legitimate means only, spreading information and disseminating the facts relating to HLS's record of animal cruelty, fraud and incompetence. We believe that there is more than enough evidence for the UK government to withdraw HLS's licence and close them down.

Readers must bear in mind that certain demonstrations eg, home demonstrations and office occupations are now illegal in the UK although they are perfectly legal in other countries, and the inclusion of reports relating to these demos abroad does in no sense amount to encouragement to do similar demos in the UK.

Company details are listed for the purposes of readers making informative and polite communications with the companies listed. The details are not intended for repetitive, rude or threatening calls.

SHAC is a global organisation and so the laws differ from country to country. Sections 145 &146 in the UK make it a specific offence to target a company involved with the vivisection industry with a view to getting them to sever a contract by illegal means.

So does this mean that demonstrations, phone calls and emails are now illegal? No it doesn't, but what it does mean is that to target a company illegally is. So what does illegally mean? Well to ring a company up or send them an email saying that they shouldn't be dealing with HLS because of Huntingdon's appalling record of animal cruelty is perfectly legal. But on the other hand to ring a company up and say they should stop dealing with HLS or else know what I mean? is illegal as it is threatening. It is all about common sense and proportionality. If you are still unsure please consult the legal booklet. You can always contact us about legal issues and also check out www.freebeagles.org
