(save the newchurch guinea pigs)

It took six years of hard work until we finally heard the news we'd longed to hear, that the Newchurch guinea pig farm was to close. In those six years there have been times of tears, laughter, frustration and bafflement, but there was always the determination that this guinea pig farm would close and that we would be there when it did.

No matter how many times animal abusers say they will never close, do not believe them. Just a month before the closure of the Newchurch guinea pig farm was announced, one of the co-owners was quoted in an interview stating that he would never give up the breeding of the guinea pigs while it was still legal.

Press reports indicated that major pharmaceutical companies and the British Government had been trying to persuade the farmers to continue with their vile trade. Despite offering them extra money, support and new laws aimed directly at animal rights campaigners it was not enough. The efforts of this Government, the biased police and the vivisection industry were no match for the sheer determination and compassion of those fighting to end animal abuse.

The campaign to close this family run business has had far reaching effects that we could never have imagined when the campaign first started. The news of its closure hit international headlines in many different countries. The Research Defence Society told everyone who would listen that the farms closure sent out the message that scientific research was not welcome in Britain. Good. The sooner these animal abusers get that message the better.

But this victory was not easy. It took many years of stamina and commitment and within this time we were vilified by the press, hounded by the police, physically attacked by the farm's workers and supporters as well as working flat out on getting this hell hole to close. But it was worth every second to hear the words 'It's going to close'. The advice we give to all of those out there fighting against animal abuse is to keep at it, keep at it, keep at it. Through the times of hardship and exhaustion remember the victories we have had. Victories that have been achieved against all the odds, and remember the joy felt at each campaigns success. These victories were only achieved because people 'kept at it'.

THERE HAVE BEEN TIMES OF TEARS, LAUGHTER, FRUSTRATION AND BAFFLEMENT, BUT THERE WAS ALWAYS THE DETERMINATION THAT THIS GUINEA PIG FARM WOULD CLOSE AND THAT WE WOULD BE THERE WHEN IT DID.

We've been stuck in a strange limbo for the last few months as we've awaited the guinea pigs sheds to finally close for good. The campaign will not finish until the guinea pig sheds are finally empty and the family has stated that that part of their business is closed. The message to all animal abusers is that we will always be there until the bitter end and so the weekly demos have continued and we've kept our profile as a still active campaign going. But as the closure nears we know that unfortunately there is still much to do as there are many more battles being fought and still to be fought against other animal hell holes. So the struggle continues. But heartened by all the successes there have been we know that we can and we will be successful in these too. We can't afford not to be, as we are fighting for the lives of every single animal that is suffering inside these establishments. We can't let them down, we will not let them down, as we are their only hope.

32 BEAGLES RESCUED, AND AN EXPERIMENT SHUT DOWN

In early July, activists in Croatia began hearing about a load of young beagles that had arrived at the local Faculty of Veterinary Medicine. A student working undercover in the labs sent pictures of the beagles to Animal Friends Croatia, and the group – deciding the situation was dire - immediately organized demonstrations for the following day, July 13.

Activists from across the country converged for a protest that was covered extensively by the media, and soon the cause of the beagles was a top news story throughout the nation. Soon after the story broke, Animal Friends Croatia was able to learn more about the planned experiment. The dogs were being held in quarantine until they could be shipped to the University's Medical School, where they were to be used in bone-breaking experiments and killed in three months. The tests were meant to examine morphogenic bone protein, a substance that had already been tested numerous times on animals and humans. Furthermore, many documents filed by faculty involved in the experiment were falsified or missing necessary signatures. Twenty-four hours after the first protest, 70 more protestors from across Croatia rallied in front of the University, demanding a halt to the experiment. The University Dean assured animal rights organizations that a full investigation would take place, but that was not enough. That Saturday, 500 protestors took to the streets with signs, megaphones, and companion dogs in tow.

Bad news broke the following day – one of the faculty members involved in the experiment, Professor Antun Brkic, had already illegally begun the experiment, fracturing the bones of several puppies. The Dean of the University immediately suspended the professor and halted the experiments, and Animal Friends of Croatia was brought in to guard the dogs. News media joined them, and even Croatia's President Stjepan Mesic sent his best wishes for the beagles. The pressure on the University was too great, and the Dean soon announced that the experiments were cancelled and the beagles would be set free.

When the big day came, all 32 beagles – some of whom were badly injured when the experiments began – were turned over to loving families. All of the animals are recovering well, and Animal Friends Croatia is fighting for criminal prosecution of the faculty members involved.

Besides the immediate, life-saving impact this had on the beagles, it also marked one of the first times the people of Croatia were asked to seriously consider the rights of animals. Overwhelmingly, their response was one of empathy and support - in a recent poll, 92% of Croatians said they do not believe that animal testing is necessary. The "Battle for the Beagles" is an example of what can happen when what goes on in the dark corridors of vivisection labs is brought into the light of public scrutiny – and it is an inspiration for all of us who are fighting for the animals locked away in cages across our country right now.

NEWS

MASSIVE DEMOS, COAST TO COAST

In the suburbs of Los Angeles, 80-100 protestors in town for the AR-2005 conference took to the homes of HLS collaborators (see cover), even hiring a 60-seat bus to travel from house to house. During a national BioTechnology conference in Philadelphia, 80 protestors marched through the streets to the homes of GlaxoSmithKline executives.

HLS FLEA MARKET

In a desperate bid to free up funds for its impending debts, Huntingdon announced in June that it had sold all of its land and property to Alconbury Estates, an investment company owned by Andrew Baker. A sale-leaseback agreement with Alconbury will have HLS paying $5 million per year in rental fees and not even owning the floors they walk on. In typical Huntingdon fashion, the transaction was press released as a success when in reality it was anything but. In addition to having no friends and no funds, HLS now has no assets – something that will turn away even the most scurrilous company that might have thought about bailing HLS out of bankruptcy.

NYSE PULLS THE PLUG

In what may have been Huntingdon's biggest and most public humiliation of the year, the New York Stock Exchange reversed their decision to list HLS's stock a mere 45 minutes before the stock was to be sold. HLS CEO Brian Cass (who had flown in from the UK for the occasion), Andrew Baker, and HLS General Counsel Mark Bibi were having breakfast at the Stock Exchange when the bad news dropped. The effects on HLS's finances and reputation were astounding. Huntingdon's share price on the OTCBB dropped from a years-long high of $18 to as low as $9 before finally settling around $11. Reports of the sudden reversal made TV, radio, and print headlines across the world, as Huntingdon earned the dubious distinction of being the only company to have ever received such treatment by the NYSE. One investor remarked, "We are astonished that the New York Stock Exchange would knuckle under to a load of English hippies." Bibi put it more bluntly, stating "A handful of animal extremists had succeeded where Osama bin Laden had failed."

Never has the power of the campaign to close HLS been so tangible. While the NYSE refuses to disclose why it reversed its position on Huntingdon's stock, it's clear that the Big Board did not want to square off with impassioned and committed animal activists. Prior to the listing date, thousands of emails had poured into the NYSE condemning their plan to list HLS. A week previous, two direct actions at Long Island yacht clubs affiliated with short-lived HLS market maker Carr Securities led to a much publicized ending of its relationship with the lab. Of course, Huntingdon's shaky-at-best financial situation could also have factored into Stock Exchange's decision. While they claim to be still reviewing their decision, activists are ready and willing to go toe to toe with NYSE execs should they make the mistake of listing HLS.

SHAC DOES THE SENATE

After hearings that more closely resembled support group sessions for HLS and its buddies, U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Environment and Public Works Chairman James Inhofe joined FBI Assistant Deputy Director John Lewis in declaring animal rights and environmental activists to be the number one domestic terrorist threat. During the hearings, Skip Boruchin of Legacy Trading (the lone rouge market maker that continues to deal with HLS) shared how he felt "violated, vulnerable...and gravely frightened," and HLS Counsel Mark Bibi added that his encounters with SHAC activists have been a "terrifying life-changing experience." Animal Liberation Press Officer Jerry Vlasak offered a sole voice in defense of the animals at HLS and elsewhere, and grabbed headlines for his support of militant tactics in the name of animal liberation. Broadcast live on C-Span, the hearings further demonstrated the impact that the campaign is having in rattling the vivisection industry's cages.

MEDIFACTS SHOWS HLS THE DOOR

Further demonstrating that direct action does indeed get the goods, MediFacts International – which played a vital support role to HLS's clinical lab division CentraLabs – announced it was ending its relationship with the lab after five MediFacts execs had their homes and vehicles covered in paint in one night.

THE SIDEBAR

KEEPING YOU UP TO DATE ON ALL THINGS LEGAL

* "Injunction Junction" – add Roche (CA), Teva Pharmaceuticals (PA), and Seaboard Securities to the list of companies that have tried and failed to get injunctions against protests targeting their firm.

* The FBI investigating a banner hang? It's true! Police officers investigating a banner hang against a Roche attorney in California found an FBI special agent already on the scene. If hanging a piece of cloth isn't terrorism, we don't know what is!

* Two grand juries targeting animal rights activists have been called in California, and three activists spent several months behind bars for refusing to testify before being freed. Visit www.FBIWitchHunt.com for reports and info on how you can help

* A GlaxoSmithKline employee was arrested on seven criminal charges after he punched a female protestor in the face then attacked his company's own security guard during an HLS demo outside of GSK in Research Triangle Park, North Carolina.

* Another GSK employee in North Carolina was handed a 35-year jail term after murdering her husband with arsenic she acquired from her GSK laboratory. The employee was having an affair with a fellow GSK coworker. Oh, vivisectors in love – isn't it romantic?

* Though HLS has not had an auditor in the UK since 2003, in violation of law, the UK government has allowed them to continue on without one until HLS can find an auditor willing to work for them, and until legislation is passed to protect the potential new auditor's identity.

* GlaxoSmithKline will pay $150.8 million in fraud charges after the U.S. Justice Department alleged the company set "fraudulent and inflated prices" for two drugs .

* Over 20 states have filed suit against 85 of the country's largest drug firms for charging inflated average wholesale prices (AWP) for prescription drugs to defraud state Medicaid programs. HLS customers Abbot Labs and Bristol Myers Squibb are among those named. Over $2.5 billion has been collected by state governments so far.

* HLS's largest customer, Roche Pharmaceuticals, came under fire in the U.S. for refusing to make its vaccine against Avian Flu freely available to governments or health organizations. Though it didn't develop the drug but rather purchased it from the company which invented it, Roche refuses to give up patent rights on the vaccine – meaning hundreds of millions of people in the U.S. and abroad will be at risk should a bird flu pandemic break out.

While the media may malign home demonstrations when it's animal rights activists doing the picketing (somehow peaceful demos become terrorizing a family), the galvanizing effect of taking it to the homes of those in power has been aptly demonstrated this past summer and fall by Cindy Sheehan and her supporters.

Cindy Sheehan is by all means a normal, middle-class, middle-aged woman who lived a quiet life up until this summer. A resident of Vacaville, California, Sheehan is a devote Catholic whose son Casey served as a cub scout and an altar boy before joining the Army in an effort to get to college. But after the 24 year-old Casey was killed in Iraq in 2004, Sheehan became a one-woman crusade for accountability on the part of the Bush administration.

While Sheehan initially contented herself with attending the large national and regional anti-war demonstrations, she soon realized that they were not doing enough. She knew that she as an individual could have a much greater impact, simply by going straight to the source of power – the President himself.

She and several supporters traveled halfway across the country to set up a camp outside of President Bush's Crawford, Texas ranch. Their demand – a face-to-face meeting with Bush to get answers as to why the U.S. invaded Iraq, and when the troops were going to be pulled out – was and has continued to be snubbed by the President. But her cause and her message has been covered in thousands of newspaper and television stories across the world, and has helped turn public opinion against Bush and his Iraq policy.

In the process, Cindy encountered the usual antagonism from those she was targeting and from law enforcement. After a fruitless meeting with Bush's National Security Advisor and Chief of Staff, Sheehan and her companions were deemed a "threat to national security" and threatened with arrest. Nevertheless protests continued for several weeks, followed by a bus tour that ended with an illegal "home demo" at the White House, and in recent weeks Sheehan and her supporters have returned to the Crawford ranch.

AS AMERICAN AS APPLE PIE

Cindy Sheehan and the Power of Home Demos

While Sheehan's campaign is the most nationally recognized, there have been other recent and highly-publicized home protests. In Philadelphia, 30 high school students began holding daily demonstrations outside the home of a woman who had hit and killed their classmate with her SUV but then fled the scene and impeded police investigations. After two months of picketing, the woman confessed that she was indeed the driver in the hit and run, and is now facing criminal charges in the teenager's death. In Washington, D.C., nearly two hundred Latino activists angry about immigration policies surrounded the home of a senior Bush administration cabinet member, chanting and banging on windows and doors before eventually being dispersed by police. In New York, union workers held a massive demonstration in front of Mayor Michael Bloomberg's home.

So the next time a surly neighbor or ill-mustached cop tells you you're wrong for demonstrating outside of someone's house, just tell them – if middle-aged moms, school kids, and union workers can do it, then we can too! Home demos are as American as apple pie – and they get the goods!

FINANCIAL MELTDOWN

To HLS, the 180,000 animals that are killed in its labs each year are nothing more than dollar signs. Every life has its price, a market value that each cat, primate, and beagle takes on once it's been injected with pesticides, had detergents poured down its throat, or had its legs broken in the name of product testing. Blind to anything but the financial bottom line, the campaign to shut down HLS started with one reality very clear in its mind: that HLS and companies like it will never stop torturing animals out of the goodness of their hearts, or out of an understanding that animal testing is a useless and out-dated mode of scientific inquiry. The only way to shutter HLS, to save the 70,000 animals locked in their labs right now, and to prevent humans from the harm that will be caused by the fraudulently-tested products that come out of Huntingdon, is to attack the lab's finances. Only by making it impossible for HLS and its unscrupulous executives to make a buck will we succeed in shutting down the lab forever, and ending the misery inside.

Since the start of the campaign, the financial impact on HLS has been devastating. Major customers quit doing business with the lab, investors and market makers fled, the stock price crashed, rose, then fell again. Hundreds of suppliers have stopped servicing the lab, making it hard for them to conduct business as usual. HLS was kicked off, then denied re-listing, on the NYSE. No bank, insurance company, or UK auditor will touch them, and their notoriety as a pariah in the research community has kept directors, scientists, customers, and funds away from the lab. 2006 is a make-or-break year for HLS, and it's our job to make sure the ship sinks: here, now, whatever it takes. Let this eight-page insert be your starting point, but by no means an end. Be ready for weekly email action alerts and periodic action mailers.

The time is now. Are you ready to make history?

ANIMAL ABUSE ISN'T PROFITABLE!

HLS: 2006 Financial Report

A Cliff Notes on HLS's financial doldrums

All inspirational rhetoric aside, the financial reality for HLS really is a tough one. The New York Stock Exchange's September decision to postpone (and thus far deny) the listing of their stock caused the lab's Over the Counter Bulletin Board share prices to plummet 40%, finally reversing the steady rise in price that began immediately after the federal indictments against the SHAC-7. Shortly after the NYSE victory, activists got ahold of a list of HLS's institutional investors. In little over a month's time, half of HLS's investors sold off their shares, a $14 million loss for the lab. Only a few companies continue to invest in the lab - it is essential that these firms be taught that investing in HLS is not worth the trouble. In this pull out section, and in weekly e-mail alerts, you'll receive information about how to target these companies and any others that get caught investing in Huntingdon.

In June, Huntingdon announced that it had sold all three of its operating facilities to Alconbury Estates, a pseudo-investment company controlled by HLS's Chariman and CEO Andrew Baker (do you think any legitimate investment firm would touch Huntingdon's property?) Alconbury paid $40 million for the three properties with an agreement that Huntingdon will rent the facilities back each year for a total of $5 million per year. The properties were sold in order to help the lab pay off one of several outstanding debts that it owed, an impending $41 million dollar bank debt.

While HLS press-released the transaction as a victory, in reality it was anything but. The sale was little more than a desperate move that a deeply-indebted company had to make to temporarily make ends meet, regardless of the consequences. While the sale gave the lab an additional $40 million in the short term, its balance sheet will have to reflect the deal as a net loss, since the lab lost assets in the transaction. The sale cost HLS several million in fees, and now they will need to pay an additional $5 million per year in rent - more operating expenses for a company that doesn't have money to spare. Most importantly, it further erodes HLS's ability to secure another refinancing when the lab's other debt deadlines arrive. While a very foolish investment company might have supported Huntingdon before (because even if the lab went belly-up, at least the land and buildings could be sold off to make the investment company some money), now HLS owns nothing, not even the grounds they work on. With nothing to offer anyone, HLS is in a very dangerous situation come September 2006, when $46.2 million in Convertible Capital Bonds debts are due.

JUST THE FACTS, MA'AM

HLS's quarterly reports provide some insight into how the lab has done in 2005. Even with the usual cooked books (HLS's reports all read "unaudited", as no auditor will touch them - but then, HLS wouldn't lie about their finances, would they?), the picture isn't good.

- Net income has dropped more than 50% from last year, from $4.4 million (first nine months) in 2004 to $2.0 million (first nine months) in 2005.

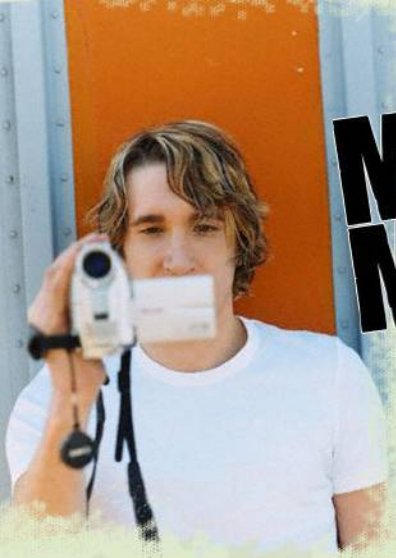

- Cash on hand has dropped from $33 million on January 1, 2005 to $12 million as of September 30, 2005.

- HLS's $46.2 million debt in Convertible Capital Bonds has now been reclassified as short-term debt as it is due back in less than a year - in September 2006.

- In addition to the Convertible Capital Bonds, HLS has $29.6 million in long-term debt, $33.3 million in pension liabilities, and it currently owes $7 million more in outstanding accounts and fees than it will receive or is owed by others.

- Net new business signings (new customer orders) have fallen significantly over the last two quarters. In the first quarter HLS posted $48.3 million in net new business signings. In the second quarter, it fell to $46.2 million. In the third quarter, it dropped further to $42.0 million. (Fourth quarter reports were not available as this newsletter went to print). It is clear that the campaign against HLS's customers - and all the notoriety and media attention the campaign has been receiving internationally - has persuaded many companies against contracting with HLS.

- Perhaps most revealing is the fact that in HLS's third quarter reports, CEO Andrew Baker spoke about nothing but the impact the animal rights community has had on his company, including keeping them off the stock exchange. Considering that quarterly reports are the main opportunity a company has to dress itself up and show off how well it is doing to potential investors, the fact that Baker devoted none of his time to his company's finances is very telling!

MARKET MAKERS EXPOSED

INVESTORS IN DEATH

After HLS's shaming at the hands of the NYSE, their crooked friends at the Over the Counter Bulletin Board decided they'd tried to help out the lab by shielding the identities of their market makers - an unprecedented measure that violates the public transparency so essential to a fair and public market. Unfortunately for the both of them, a sympathetic OTCBB employee released the names of the companies that have been making a market for HLS. The companies below have been profiting off the animals at Huntingdon, under the cloak of secrecy.

Please contact these cowardly companies (all of them repeat offenders) and tell them we will always find them, we never give in, and we always win! Demand they issue a statement saying they will never again trade in LSRI.

"I hope you're happy now that you've interfered with the free functioning of the capital markets of this country..."
- Cortina Asset Management executive, after selling off their LSRI shares

After activists got their hands on a list of HLS's institutional investors, it was only a matter of weeks before most of the investors called it quits and sold off their shares. Only a few companies continue to hold stock in the lab, in a futile attempt to make money off of HLS's fluctuating share price. These companies are investing in the torture and murder of animals, and each needs to be contacted and urged to sell their shares in LSRI.

Investors come and (when SHAC is involved) they go. Be sure to check in with www.shacameria.net for the latest info on who is and is not investing in HLS.

THE LIST

At a time when the Pharmaceutical industry is experiencing a slowdown in growth, rocky stock prices, little in the way of promising new drugs, and an angry consumer base, the big drug companies are desperate to put a positive spin on their problems. Wall Street financial analysts receive regular updates from them, are treated to special meetings, lunches, and presentations. They are wined and dined in hopes of positive reviews and inspired investor confidence.

They – in many respects – control the fate of companies that we've come to know and hate, Huntingdon Life Sciences chief among them.

Just as our opposition knows their importance and acts on it daily, so must we. The following is a list of some of the most well-known and influential pharmaceutical analysts. They have been quoted in newspapers across the world speaking knowledgably about trends and trades with reference to bio-techs and drug giants. When they analyze and create stock portfolios they look at a number of sources to give the investor- and market at large – the most accurate prediction of how a company will perform. It would benefit our cause and the animals in HLS (and is only fair) that these same analysts here from us!

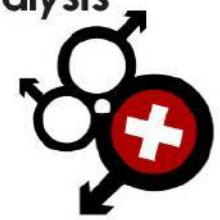

Please write polite and informational letters. Create a substantive script to read from when calling. Send emails chalk full of the 'talking points' about the state of HLS. Give them your first hand testimonial as to your protest activity against HLS, the lawsuits you are advertising and encouraging, the list of investors, market makers, and customers that have left HLS, and – most importantly – the lab's precarious financial situation.

PLEASE remember these analysts are ALLIES and not ENEMIES. We've become very used to treating the brokers and bankers with a degree of disdain – but what our opposition will hate more than anything is how serious these analysts will take our updates and how it will impact their companies.

THE BIG 3

A mere ten companies provide Huntingdon with 50% of their income. Three of those companies- GlaxoSmithKline, Novartis, and Roche - have been singled out as targets of choice, and across the world these big pharma bad-guys have been hounded, hassled, and just plain embarassed by dedicated activists. The payoff has been big: 2005 saw Huntingdon's new business signings plummet 13%, or $6.3 million dollars, since the campaign against the "Big 3" began. We call this the "Trickle Down" SHAC Effect. When the industry leaders are getting pounded so hard, what intelligent smaller company would want to endure similar suffering? Word spreads through media sensationalism, word of mouth, and direct communication, and potential contracts with HLS are thrown out the window.

Let 2006 be a fresh start, as we re-commit our selves to hammering all of HLS's customers, wher ever we find them - starting with the Big 3.

ConferenceCrashers

"We weren't invited, but we're coming anyway..."

While some of us go to potlucks, others go to music shows, and still others go to clubs to have fun, every year the lowly riff-raff that make up the vivisection industry get together at conferences for the sparse social interaction these ethical misfits enjoy. Huddled together in swanky hotels to share advice, trade stories, and gorge on the continental breakfast, conference attendees are a prime target for those of us who want to drive home the message that HLS is a sinking ship, and if you touch it you might just get sucked down with them.

Crashing a conference isn't hard. All you need are flyers about HLS (which we're happy to provide you with) and a few hours to devote to the animals when the travelling freak show comes to town. Of course, a bullhorn and placards never hurt! And then there are those who aren't content with being on the outside and decide to go in and "crash" the party themselves - flipping tables, throwing confetti, shouting on a bullhorn, and making as big of a commotion as possible.

HLS and CentraLabs will be making several conference appeareances this year, and numerous other conferences will host GSK, Roche, Novartis, and hundreds of other Huntingdon customers and industry suppliers. Check out the list below, and hit up every conference that comes near you - don't let these puppy-killing bastards feel welcome in (or anywhere near) your home town!

AAPS Pharmaceutical Technologies Conference

- Date: January 22-27
- Who will be there: GSK, Dow, and Pfizer
- The party's at: The Thayer Hotel, 674 Thayer Road West Point, NY 10996
- More info: www.aapspharmaceutica.com/meetings/arden06/Imagespdfs/Arden06.pdf

Drug Development Summit 2006

- Date: February 12-15
- Who will be there: GSK, Roche, and Novartis will be speaking and honored at a luncheon; many other HLS customers will be there as well
- The party's at: The Sheraton Wild Horse Pass Resort, 5594 West Wild Horse Pass Boulevard, Chandler, Arizona 85226

WHEN THE STAKES ARE HIGH

THE SKY'S THE LIMIT

shac_tics

When HLS closes, a lot will be said about what exactly it was that brought the world's second largest vivisection lab crumbling to the ground. Without a doubt, one of the foremost reasons will be the creativity of those who made it happen. Many of us have stood lined in front of an executive's house, or shouted at employees at an office building. But then there are the creative geniuses – those whose minds shine like a beacon for tame, stuck-in-a-rut activists of all causes and campaigns. They are the innovators, the ground breakers, the pioneers of the "SHAC-tics" that have led many a company to drop HLS like a hot coal. So have a laugh and take note – below are some of the tricks of the trade that activists across the country have used in keeping the campaign effective and fun at the same time.

Texas – An exec's church is visited by activists during mass.

California – Bearing balloons and pretending to be delivering a birthday greeting, activists gain entrance to an office – then out came the bullhorn!

New York – Stencils are spray-painted on the ground surrounding an exec's apartment high-rise

Los Angeles – Strips of firecrackers are set off outside the home of HLS's CEO

Ohio – Potatoes, firecrackers, and sparklers are left in the tailpipes of execs' cars, giving them a "surprise" start to their morning when the car engine was turned on.

New York – An exec's boat is sunk. Yarrgh!

San Francisco – An activist throws up on a table that HLS was holding at a pharmaceutical conference. The next day, another activist flips the table over.

New Jersey – Activists steal an exec's credit card info and order him a blow-up sex doll

California – Stink bombs are detonated at an office

Pennsylvania – An HLS vet tech has her panties stolen and auctioned online

Washington – Two smoke bombs set off at an office high-rise clear the entire building for several hours

New York – An executive's wife has traveler's checks stolen and the money donated to charity

Los Angeles – A b.b. gun is used to shoot out the window of an exec

Oklahoma – An HLS Market Maker's exec has his phone and internet lines cut in the middle of the night

Pennsylvania – An email program sends hundreds of thousands of emails to an HLS supplier over several days.

Boston – A mock graveyard is erected on the lawn of an exec in the middle of the night

California – A banner is hung from a tree naming and shaming a local HLS collaborator

Ohio – The Vegan Dumpster Militia pelts the house and fills the mailbox of an exec with rotten fruits and vegetables

New Jersey – Letters are sent to an exec's neighbors and associates, stating that he is a known child molestor

Pennsylvania – A pint of urine is thrown through an HLS employee's window

San Francisco – Animal feces and bloody stuffed animals are left scattered on the lawn of an exec in the middle of the night

California – Hundreds of magazine subscriptions are ordered for execs

New York – Personal alarms are detonated and thrown on the roofs and in the bushes of houses belonging to HLS supporters

Boston – An undertaker is called to an exec's house to pick up his supposedly dead body

California – Silly string, confetti, and bullhorns are unleashed inside an office

New Jersey – An HLS employee has his car flipped over

California – A work roster is stolen during an office demo; demos at the homes of employees named on the roster follow hours afterwards

Florida – Activists break into the office of an HLS market maker and steal sensitive client information

Pennsylvania – An exec supposedly sends berating letters to family, business partners, and associates

California – "Wanted" posters are wheatpasted around the town of an exec

Delaware – Five hundred calls a day pour into an investor's office

SMASHING HLS COAST to COAST

From the East Coast to the West Coast, HLS supporters are being hit again and again by independent regional groups who all share one common goal – shutting down HLS for good! Here are some brief reports from different regions across the country. If you're region isn't represented by any of the ones below, that means that YOU are needed to get the campaign going in your area! Even if you're in the middle of nowhere, you can always phone, email, fax, and write – some of the most effective tools at getting rid of pesky customers and suppliers, when you use them with tenacity and creativity!

BRINGIN' DOWN THE HAMMER

BOSTON

Boston activists have held numerous home demos against execs of HLS customer Novartis, providing support to the international campaign against them. In the spring, we demoed outside of a major pharmaceutical conference, letting everyone there know that if you deal with HLS you deal with us. We also held a number of demos and leafletings against execs of Boston Private Bank (which owned HLS's largest institutional investor, Dalton Grenier). In the fall the daughter of Glaxo CEO Jean-Pierre Garnier was humiliated when activists unfurled a banner and yelled at her through a bullhorn while she rowed down the Charles River in a regatta race. We also began contacting and targeting HLS investor Fidelity Investments, headquartered right here in Boston.

CHICAGO

Chicago has gotten in on the action against GSK, targeting one of their biggest investors – Wachovia Securities. Numerous demos have been held outside of Wachovia branches in Chicago, and even threats of baseball bat beatings have not deterred these activists.

NEW YORK CITY

In addition to continuing to hold frequent demonstrations outside of the penthouse of HLS CEO Andrew Baker, New York City activists have been extremely busy targeting the financial supporters of HLS. Demos against Washington Mutual, Dalton Greiner, and the Vertical Group have helped convince those companies to forswear all ties with HLS, and activists have hit dozens of other financial targets as well – market makers, investors, even holding informational demonstrations on Wall Street to let investors know that investing in animal cruelty at HLS is both unethical and not profitable. Activists have also been targeting HLS's largest customers, Roche, GlaxoSmithKline, and Novarits, at their offices and offices of subsidiaries and collaborators. No doubt the biggest result of all of the financial pressure was helping convince the NYSE to deny Huntingdon's listing at the last moment, resulting in tons of negative publicity about the lab and instilling the message that this campaign packs a powerful punch, and is not to be messed with.

WASHINGTON

After a visit to the home of the President of Washington Mutual, the firm decided to sell off all of their shares in HLS's stock. Washington activists have also been active in supporting the SHAC7.

LONG ISLAND

As always Long Island activists have kept a constant pressure on HLS targets in their region. Long Island started the year continuing their long-running and hard-hitting campaign against HLS customer Forest Labs, which has grabbed numerous newspaper headlines. In the late spring and summer Long Island got in on the action against GlaxoSmithKline, targeting OSI Pharmaceuticals (which seats a GSK Exec on their board) with office and home demos, as well as major GSK investors Citibank and Wachovia. Repeat demos at all of these targets have shown GSK collaborators that we don't give up and we don't back down!

OHIO

Ohio has spent the year targeting a number of HLS supporters, in particular Ohio-based customer Girindus. Repeated demos have been held against Girindus as well as their landlord, Pantheon Pharma. At one point Girindus tried to take legal action against a man who happened to have a similar name to the one listed on the email address used in communicating with Girindus– whoops! This guy had never even heard of HLS. Besides our hard-hitting campaign against Girindus, we have pitched in with many demos against national targets Wachovia, UPS, Forest Pharmaceuticals, Novartis, and Fisher Scientific, including one day in which we held 10 demos against a variety of HLS targets. In the spring, we held a large weekend of action that drew lots of supporters and included demos against HLS as well as against a controversial highway building project in the area.

PHILADELPHIA

Philly's work in 2005 centered on GlaxoSmithKline, one of HLS's top customers. Nearly 100 demos have been held against GSK and their supporters, including one day in which over 30 demos were held against GSK. In addition to targeting Glaxo's top execs, we have targeted companies who seat those execs on their board of directors, with both home and office demos. One of our best sets of demos was during the BioTechnology Conference in June. Over a dozen demos were held throughout the weekend at the Conference and its gala balls, including one day of home demos where 80 protestors (flanked by 40 police) marched through the streets to GSK execs' homes. Besides targeting GSK, we helped knock out SEKO Worldwide (and were assaulted in the process) and Greenville Capital Management, and held demos against several other suppliers and customers. Our work against HLS has drawn the attention of lots of mainstream media, further spreading the message that dealing with HLS is bad news.

NORTH CAROLINA

During one weekend in October, a group of North Carolina activists targeted several HLS supporters, primarily GSK. Over 20 home demonstrations or leafletting s were held against GSK executives and people they do business with, as well as Novartis and BASF (an HLS supplier). At a demo outside of Glaxo's main facility, a crazed Glaxo employee punched a protestor in the face then attached his own security guard – causing Monday morning chaos at the facility, and sending the employee off to the slammer. A news article about the event in the largest area newspaper further shamed GSK and its employees.

SAN FRANCISCO

San Francisco Bay Area activists have been busy as always. Numerous office demos, home demos, late night visits, banner hangs, and other actions have turned the screws on Roche Pharmaceuticals, garnering a number of news stories in the local press. Roche even tried (and failed) an injunction against local activists - too bad for them! HLS suppliers Phytopharm and Bachem Labs have also taken quite a pounding, and HLS customer Santen stopped contracting with the lab after a number of actions against them.

Meanwhile, a grand jury is trying to scoop in animal rights activists and derail their efforts - visit www.FBIWitchhunt.com for more information and updates.

NEW JERSEY

New Jersey activists have targeted a variety of companies, primary among them Roche Pharmaceuticals. Numerous greet-the-worker demos were held at their headquarters, often followed by rounds of home demos against their execs. At Roche's 100th birthday celebration, a panicked Roche facility was ringed by dozens of police, bomb squad, etc. Several articles about Roche's contracting with HLS have appeared in the local newspapers. We have successfully targeted several other companies as well. Days after our demo against market maker Vertical Group, they dropped HLS's stock. Following a demo at HLS investor Thomson Horstmann and Bryant (covered by a large front page story in the North Jersey paper), they dumped $1.5 million in shares.

BALTIMORE

Baltimore activists held several meetings with the CEO of Invitro Technologies prior to an office demo and office disruption, before deciding they were not a viable target. In the last few months we have targeted HLS Customer Shire Laboratories Inc. which started off with a letter regarding their contract. After receiving no response from them, we did one office demo and two home demos along with some leafleting of the neighbors of the President and Vice President. A banner was hung on the VP's house and 500 emails were sent to the company. Finally, the President and CEO opened up a dialogue claiming that they never used HLS. Documents show that Shire used HLS in the past, but after this little confrontation we highly doubt they will even consider HLS again. Now we are researching the other HLS customers in Maryland.

LOS ANGELES

On the final night of AR-2005 in Los Angeles, 80-100 activists boarded what has come to be known as the "SHAC Bus" and headed out for a six-hour round of mobile home demos against customers of HLS. As many of the protesters were from out-of-town, they enjoyed a first-class tour en route to each venue of historic sites and points of interest in Los Angeles, Beverly Hills, and Hollywood. We vowed we will all be together again in 2007, when the AR Convention will once again meet in Los Angeles. Activists also spent the early part of the year targeting Andrew Baker's house in the LA suburbs, enduring arrests and house raids in response to their repeated and sometimes boisterous demos at the HLS Pres's CA sanctuary. But that's nothing - absolutely nothing - compared to what the animals are suffering this very minute inside the HLS hellhole!

HATE BROKEN GLASS?

THEN WHY ARE YOU WORKING WITH HLS?

2005 was a landmark year in the campaign to close HLS, with the announcement that over 100 companies have abandoned the failing lab in just 365 days. It seemed that before one could pick up a placard and some literature and make their way down to the local animal abuser, they were already sending in their letter distancing themselves from the most looked down upon lab in the world. What had them tucking tail so fast? Persistence and dedication to making this one of the hardest working animal rights campaigns in history. And that includes the acceptance of the 'every tool in the toolbox' ideology.

A large majority of these companies have been on the receiving end of one of the most successful animal rights factions - the Animal Liberation Front. These brave women and men certainly did not rest this year. Despite governments on both sides of the Atlantic increasing sentences and creating new laws aimed at underground activists, the movement has done everything but slow down.

Utilizing every tool in their toolbox, the ALF relentlessly attacked countless HLS supplier, customer, investor and market maker. From a match to paint to glue to sledgehammer to paint stripper, target after target received their just desserts. Here is just a sampling:

06/18/05 (UK) Executives with HLS collaborator's Forum Biosciences and Atofina UK visited at night; homes and cars painted.

06/23/05 (USA) UPS (HLS supplier) van hit with paint bombs in Portland.

06/24/05 (USA) Windows broken and gallons of red paint splashed at two offices of Wachovia Securities on Long Island, in protest of bank's support of GlaxoSmithKline (HLS customer).

08/25/05 (USA) ALF Pirates for Animal Liberation paint anti-HLS slogans all over yacht club (Carr Securities president is member). (Carr has since dropped HLS.)

09/19/05 (UK) ALF slashed tires and paint-stripped car at home of Chiron director.

09/21/05 (Cyberspace) Automated attack flooded Phenomenex (HLS customer) with thousands of phone calls and e-mails.
