"Throughout the US, SHAC's tactics and strategies need to be analyzed and implemented by the environmental movement. ... In recent months, activists haven't waited for Climber Eric to show up in the forest. They have visited his home, business and insurance company."

Pacific Lumber's henchman Eric Schatz, known as Climber Eric, is an ecoterrorist in our eyes. We think you will agree. Climber Eric and his crew repeatedly enable the destruction of old-growth redwoods and endanger the lives of nonviolent treesitters in northern California. Local police and Pacific Lumber's security teams stand guard while Climber Eric is sent in to remove the treesitters - at any cost.

This spring, several treesitters were arrested and many others were put at risk. One tree pirate's tale is particularly disturbing. AMD was removed from her 200-foot-high treesit perch after Climber Eric recklessly pursued her to the tree's uppermost branches. When released from jail, AMD recounted how Climber Eric had told her that if she fell, he and his crew would testify that she had committed suicide.

For years, Earth First!ers in northern California have fought to protect the remaining old-growth forests in their bioregion from Pacific Lumber's chainsaws. For years, they have also endured Climber Eric's blatant harassment, pushing them to figure out new ways to outwit him. Yet Climber Eric and his crew would always strike again.

As Earth First!ers, we need to look outside our own circles on this one. Increasingly, we are being beaten at our own game of resistance. At times, it seems like our bag of tricks might even be empty. Our tactics and strategies become less effective once our opponents become familiar with them, and it is time for the scope of those tactics to expand.

Even though we know that the environmental and animal rights struggles are linked, from the wild animals displaced when a forest is clearcut to the chemical companies HLS holds so dear and who are poisoning the Earth and its inhabitants, there is definitely more room for our tactics and campaigns to intermingle.

This is where SHAC's campaign against HLS is vital to help turn the tide in northern California and beyond. Throughout the US, SHAC's tactics and strategies need to be analyzed and implemented by the environmental movement. The results generated by SHAC's actions are awe-inspiring, and the environmental movement needs to start paying attention.

The collaboration of our movements will only serve to further our victories for the animals and the Earth.

Once HLS is dust, the powerful network of "out-of-work" SHAC activists might want to join our comrades up in the redwood groves, where a different story is beginning to be told.

Even though Climber Eric is renowned for his unwavering determination to destroy the planet, forest defenders possess an equally fierce dedication to putting the Earth first. They know that they are the last lines of defense for the last wild places, and they are taking steps to hold Climber Eric accountable. For that matter, anyone who enables Pacific Lumber is a target.

In recent months, activists haven't waited for Climber Eric to show up in the forest. They have visited his home, business and insurance company. At home, Climber Eric was not the same confident, controlled person that he is in the woods, where he is usually protected by his crew and local police. In fact, he was visibly distraught. For Climber Eric, this is just the beginning.

In northern California, Earth First!ers are not going to allow Pacific Lumber to continue its killing spree, just as SHAC will not stop until HLS crashes and burns.

from FED to FRIEND

the shac/usa legal defense fund

As is no secret now, Corporate America is pushing for a crackdown on activists opposing their destructive and violent policies. Banks, oil companies, and animal-abusing pharmaceuticals are taking advantage of a fear-ridden society and a repression-hungry administration to silence its opponents.

Grand jury subpoenas and FBI harassment are becoming a standard experience amongst those brave enough to speak out. SHAC has had its office raided, organizers followed, phones tapped, and events almost sabotaged by these Fatsos, Bullies, and Imbeciles. However, SHAC activists have refused to budge from the tactics they use or the focus of their efforts. HLS and its supporters are ever-present in the crosshairs of this campaign, and the activists will not be distracted and misspend their time and resources on the 'authorities.'

Instead, SHAC has enlisted the help of someone who knows the inner-workings of these institutions better than anyone else - she used to work for them, in Washington DC, at the J. Edgar Hoover building. Patricia Howard worked for the FBI for nearly three years when she first moved to Washington D.C. She quit because she could not in good conscience stand for the discriminatory and conservative politics of the agency.

PATRICIA HOWARD

Since then, Patricia has gone on to become a strong and dedicated voice for the animals. You may have read one of her articles published by Impact Press, heard her Animal Rights Radio show, or met her at one of the many animal rights conferences she has helped to organize, including the infamous 1990 and 1996 March on Washington. For more than a decade, Patti has been an unwavering advocate for animal rights. She brings her skills as an actress, dancer, writer and editor to our movement - and SHAC is proud to have her help.

SHAC OFFICE, POST RAID

To repent for the nearly three miserable years she spent aiding the corrupt forces of the FBI, she now leads the fight against them for the defense of SHAC. Patricia has set up the SHAC Legal Defense Fund, which is a separate incorporated entity from SHAC USA, Inc., and is soliciting and taking donations to help cover current and possible upcoming legal costs. All monies will be monitored, maintained, and accounted for by this new, special-purpose organization.

Please be generous! Fighting federal indictments can and will get expen-sive, and the US Attorney's Office is counting on the SHAC organizers to be unable to afford the fight for their lives (and subsequently those of the animals in HLS.)

The legal defense of SHAC is the defense of all of us that dare to speak out, to be controversial, to be an effective and relentless force for animal liberation.

Send a message to the FBI with this ex-FBI employee, and support the SHAC campaign. Every dollar counts and keeps us fighting.

NATIONAL WEEK OF HOME DEMOS

hitting them at home

From May 25th -30th, activists across the U.S. held a National Week of Home Demos. From New York to California, the playing field was moved from the office park to the front yard. There were 18 home demos in one week and national media picked up on the event. HLS employees were a favorite, getting 10 home demos in New Jersey in two days - a clear reminder that a focus on management, customers, and suppliers does nothing to make us forget about the vile individuals poisoning, torturing, and murdering 500 animals every day!

ANDREW BAKER UNDER ATTACK IN NYC

ANDREW BAKER

The HLS CEO has been the subject of several loud and positive demonstrations at his upper west side penthouse apartment. Every other Sunday, a group of local activists converges to berate this chief puppy-killer with blaring megaphones, screaming voices, and colorful signs. The response has been incredible thus far.

Central Park West dog walkers and joggers have given enthusiastic support, cars in the streets have honked their approval, and even direct neighbors of Andrew Baker have hung banners from their windows calling this 'Donald Chump' a puppy-killer.

HLS MAKES A LOSS IN 1ST QUARTER RESULTS

the sinking ship keeps sinking

Yet again, HLS made a loss in its first quarter of operations for 2003. After all the bragging about record order growth and huge revenues, HLS was not able to break even. Brian Cass, the managing director of HLS, even admitted that Huntingdon has seen a 'softening of demand' recently and will be counting on the customers they currently have to see them through this mess. With SHAC lighting a fire underneath these clients, HLS still 85 million dollars away from being out of debt and, with a loan repayment deadline fast approaching, the prospects look bleak for Huntingdon. The year end report SHAC has produced for HLS is being sent to all of HLS's current customers and financial analysts to remind them of the trouble this sinking company is in. (A .PDF of the report is downloadable at www.shacamerica.net).

USDA COVERS UP FOR HLS

the government covers up for corporate america?! unheard of...

SHAC was recently contacted from someone inside the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA).

He told us that Huntingdon at East Millstone, New Jersey had recently been inspected by the USDA, and they had found several breaches of the regulations. But the inspectors had been told by those higher up that "..this is political" and under no circumstances should they file the breaches - they should just be forgotten about.

This comes as no surprise and demonstrates, yet again, that our faith in the regulator systems is pointless. It explains why every time an animal rights activist films inside of HLS, abhorrent abuses are caught vividly on tape, while the USDA never seems to 'catch' any of it. Yet again, we see the significant leaks being given to SHAC from all sources close to HLS. From employees to customers, and now government officials, HLS is being hung out to dry.

CUSTOMERS ABANDONING HLS LEFT AND RIGHT

In perhaps the most rapid abandonment yet, HLS customers are jumping ship! Since an internal list of customers and suppliers was leaked in March, seven companies (Rohm & Haas, Allergan, Merck, AMEC, Wacker, Toxweb, and Arakawa) have vowed never to use HLS again.

Arakawa is a particularly fulfilling victory, considering SHAC's efforts to cut off HLS's ties to the Japanese market. And AMEC issued a statement two days after an ALF attack that left their office covered in red paint. With no other protest activity against AMEC, there is no clearer indication that direct action gets the goods!

Even companies who have not contracted with HLS in years have contacted SHAC assuring us they will not use HLS in the future. An employee of Wacker contacted SHAC telling us how concerned her company is about the campaign. She wrote: "...Wacker Chemical Corp...has blocked employee access to SHAC websites...In fact, they are so afraid that you may track...visits to [your] sites by Wacker employees, that they regularly visit them only from computers located in the public library. They are in the process of building a security fence around the property. Interesting." Wacker issued a statement shortly thereafter - even though they are not listed as a target and have never experienced an anti-HLS protest!

The start of the customer campaign has been fast and furious. Let's keep it that way!

SHAC IN THE HEADLINES

newspapers, tv and radio, oh my...

Over the last two months, the SHAC campaign has made national headlines. In over 30 newspapers across the country (including stories run by AP and the Financial Times), featured in two national Fox News pieces, and on ABCnews.com, the tactics and victories of the campaign have not gone unnoticed. From the national week of home demonstrations, to the interactive customer campaign map on the SHAC America website, to the fact that various environmental and social justice groups are mimicking SHAC tactics – industries are worried and it is being reflected in the mainstream press. Even stories with a negative slant are easily accepted by the campaign as it puts the message out there to possible friends of HLS – if you cross SHAC, you will get burned. (see all stories on www.shacamerica.net)

WEEK OF ACTION AGAINST JAPANESE CUSTOMERS, JUNE 6 - 14

everything under the red sun

All across the UK and Europe, Japanese customers of HLS were given a healthy dose of protest pressure.

In the US, several cities participated in the International Week of Action against Japanese HLS customers. Southern California activists tied up the phone lines of CBC for two days straight, frustrating the staff and even prompting the Director of Sales, Jim Holihan, to reveal he and staff know all about HLS, and follow the SHAC campaign closely. He even stated he thinks what goes on inside of Huntingdon is horrendous, but just doesn't care enough (YET) to register his disgust with the head office in Japan.

NY activists took their message directly to the house of Kazuyoshi Sudo, Director of CBC Japan. The ADL of Long Island made his neighbors well aware of his business with HLS. At one point Mr. Sudo tried to leave his home, but frightened like the coward he is scurried back inside. There promises to be more demonstrations in the future.

Two offices of Sumitomo were targeted for protest. The US HQ in NYC was protested by loud group of activists. Their demo attracted so much attention that Sumitomo placed a security guard on every floor of their high rise building. The Philadelphia office of Sumitomo was also paid a visit. Inquisitive (and not very loyal employees) came out to tell the activists how to really make Sumitomo care about the pressure.

Best of all, as this newsletter goes to press, a large volume of leaked information from the CA office of HLS customer Yamanouchi has fallen in to SHAC's hands. A complete list of employees, phone numbers, and the companies and people Yamanouchi has had meetings with in the last year is being published. Ouch!

the MANY FACES OF SHAC

Huntingdon Life Sciences and animal abusers like 'em can call these people whatever they want - from bunny-huggers to "eco-terrorists". They can try to marginalize, slander, and outspend them. They can even sue them, or try to get them put in jail. But in the end they keep coming, and they keep calling, writing, shouting, and smashing. For they are the few and the brave - they are SHAC activists!!

Contrary to popular (media) belief, not every SHAC activist or supporter engages in underground liberation activities. One doesn't need a balaclava to participate (although it doesn't hurt) and need not even be an able-bodied person. Everyone can and is playing a part in the historical and positive effort to close HLS.

To be a part of the SHAC campaign means to be one of the most passionate activists for animal liberation there is. Time and time again this has been demonstrated, as SHAC activists are willing to travel great distances, shout until they lose their voices, spend an afternoon and 10 bucks on payphone calls, and ring a vivisector's doorbell at 3AM. No other effort has such tenacity and fierceness, and no other effort fully embodies the "every tool in the toolbox" philosophy. HLS is being beaten because of both letters and protests, both outreach and stink bombs.

Here is a small sampling of the many thousands of supporters and activists across the United States that are taking a stand against animal cruelty and helping to force the closure of HLS. They come from all walks of life and use all forms of activism. They are everywhere and everyone. They are you!

AARON

Aaron is a University student in Northern California, but he spends more time behind signs and megaphones than he does the books. Whenever and wherever possible, Aaron makes it his mission to protest animal cruelty in some way. He has traveled across the world to participate in protests against HLS from Little Rock to New York to the United Kingdom.

"An example is being made with HLS, an example to every person and company out there that abuses animals - your days are numbered! The SHAC campaign is the toughest thing going and I am so proud to be a part of it."

LORI

Lori is a successful attorney who has her own firm in Minneapolis. She handles high-profile cases and clients and is not afraid of a fight. Lori has been seen on CNN, Nightline, Larry King, Dateline, and countless others fighting for her issues. She has carried these skills over into her passion for animals. Lori is at the center of many protests, sends almost daily email bulletins about homeless cats and dogs, and operates the premiere animal rights video truck unit in the US called Black Beauty (which is currently on tour with the rock band 'Good Charlotte.') Her impact for the animals is only out-measured by her dedication.

"There has been no greater genocide, no greater holocaust, than what is happening to nonhuman animals right now. To NOT get involved in saving them from this atrocity is a crime."

JOHN

John's father was a civil rights worker and he takes inspiration from his heritage in his fight for animal rights. As a high school teacher, John educates his class about the hazards of vivisection and meat-based diets, influencing many adolescents to choose compassion over killing. When not in the classroom, John can be seen regularly setting up animal rights outreach tables and attending demonstrations against HLS.

"The civil rights activists, like my father, would probably be called terrorists today by John Ashcroft's definition. The bravery and efficacy of the SHAC campaign harkens us all back to a time when taking to the streets and putting it all on the line were what it meant to be a freedom fighter. Like the miscreants supporting the Jim Crow laws a ½ century ago, those that torture animals today will find themselves on the losing side of history. SHAC will prevail!"

KIM

Kim works as an accountant in Seattle. She is talented and creative and brings these skills into her activism. She makes pins and buttons for animal rights groups, attends as many protests as she can, and is the kind of person who will cross the grocery store to tell you not to buy a shampoo tested on animals. Kim is also a staunch supporter of direct action and loves hearing about the wearies and woes of poor 'ol HLS.

"As an accountant I can tell you that poisoning little animals for product testing, doesn't add up. HLS's accounts are worse than any other company I have ever seen, and their attempts at creating the illusion of a profit are transparent (didn't they learn anything from Enron?). The decimated value of this company is a direct result of SHAC activism and I am happy to play a part in this continuing effort."

DISCLAIMER: The following individuals listed are not members of directors of SHAC USA, Inc. Their inclusion and support are reported here for entertainment purposes only. They bear no control or responsibility for the actions taken on the part of others.

JERRY

Have you ever seen the hit show ER? Well, Jerry is the George Clooney of the animal rights community. Dr. Vlasak works as a surgeon in an LA emergency room. He has saved countless lives and chose to become a doctor to help people when in need. As a doctor, Jerry also uses his position and expertise to speak out against the use of animals in vivisection, using scientific arguments. Jerry is the founder of a chapter of the Animal Defense League and is a vocal supporter of direct action. He has gone out of his way to help close HLS, from giving speeches, and holding press conferences, to enduring arrests, and even traveling to the UK to be a part of the protests. His activism is a testimony to how the animal rights movement can be both militantly anti-vivisection and pro-science.

"As a physician, I always like to tell people who think we are winning the "disease war" through vivisection that, since the 1970's, when this "war" began, cancer rates have gone UP, strokes are UP, heart disease UP, diabetes UP, addiction UP, alcoholism UP. There is more suffering, more disease, and more death from these causes than ever before.

HLS Laboratories is defrauding its customers, wasting valuable health-care resources and abusing animals unnecessarily.

History shows that animal testing is an ineffective technique in our research arsenal. By contrast, human population studies, clinical intervention trials, autopsies, cellular studies, non-invasive imaging and genetic, computer and mathematical modeling are the best foundation for effective research, are less expensive and more accurate than animal use."

LAUREN

Lauren is a Magna Cum Laude graduate of NYU and a tough-as-nails New Yorker. When not devouring a plate of pasta with real Italian marinara, this 'spicy meatball' (vegan of course!) dedicates all her time to closing HLS. Undeterred by indictments for simple protests, or having her home raided by the FBI, Lauren brings a certain…um…NYC style 'lack of etiquette' to the animal rights cause.

" 'Whatsa' matta wid you, HLS? 'As a New Yorker, I, like so many, felt a huge loss from the World Trade Center tragedy. Daily, I am reminded of this nightmarish mass loss of innocent life - because what HLS does is no different. And like Bin Laden, we should be hunting down the terrorists at HLS, to hold them accountable for the unthinkable crimes they have perpetrated against those animals. Thank God for SHAC!"

ALF 'PERSON'

You might remember this activist from such actions as The Raid on HLS, the Marshall Farms Liberation, or the Sinking of a Bank of New York Exec's Yacht. When not donning his/her balaclava and fashionable all-black attire, this activist can be seen about town working at a 'job' and doing 'stuff' for fun. As a superhero, ALF 'Person' keeps his/her secret identity a mystery, but his/her actions are always apparent, and often incendiary!

"Any friend of HLS is an enemy of the ALF. We know who their clients are. We are out there, and you're next. Until all are free."
-Communique from the ALF after raiding Merial Labs, an HLS customer, on Feb. 27th, 2003.

PAM

Where would the animal rights cause be without its TV and movie stars? Pam is an LA animal rights activist who lends her celebrity to the cause. As the voice for Lucy on the cartoon 'Peanuts' she has a special fondness for beagle dogs like Snoopy. Over the years, Pam has been a dedicated and fierce advocate for the animals. She has engaged in civil disobedience numerous times, and this 'sweet' lady never backs down from a fight.

"The hope for the animals is to be found in a human culture which learns to feel beyond itself. We must learn empathy, we must learn to see into the eyes of an animal and feel that its life has value. Nothing less will do."

NO CLOAK NO

Forget the visions of Agent 007 seizing the top secret document quite literally, the shit work

Since the mid-90's, Matt Rossell has worked undercover in numerous animal abuse industries. He has exposed some of the most chilling images of suffering, sparking campaigns against it – and providing invaluable evidence upon which to build those campaigns. In the following article Matt explains his drive to do undercover work, how he deals with the stresses, and recounts some "highlights" from his career.

As the pioneers of a campaign based on undercover investigations, let this article be an inspiration to SHAC activists everywhere. Undercover work is among the most important and invaluable work that can be done for the animals. And it's undertaken by 'regular people' like Matt – and YOU.

...on the farm

My unlikely "career" actually found me while I was employed as a security guard at Boys Town Hospital. I stumbled across the feline victims of Edward Walsh's botched surgeries on kittens just days old. This eventually led to a job as an investigator with PeTA and, after a long campaign, those kitten experiments were stopped.

With PeTA, I spent a month raising the tent at Walker Brothers Circus, monitoring the failing health of the elephants, Lota and Liz, who were suffering from tuberculosis. I participated in the anal electrocution of 500 innocent wild foxes on Dan Aschelman's Illinois fur farm to document their cruel demise on video. I spent a day pushing blood down the drain on the kill floor of an Omaha slaughterhouse and have been behind the scenes in almost every type of factory farm imaginable.

Independent of any animal rights group, my last job was working as a primate technician for more than two years trying to improve the quality of life for monkeys at the Oregon Regional Primate Research Center.

"I could never do that."

This is the most common thing I have heard from other activists when they catch wind of my undercover animal abuse investigations. In fact, I have heard it so often that I have spent a good deal of time trying to figure out what the hell is wrong with me. I have worked in some of the darkest animal abysses and chosen to participate in things I absolutely abhor.

No superheroes or heroines

So what is different about me than you? The answer is nothing. I, like you, have strong convictions, feel deeply, get depressed and angry, and have an open heart that is sensitive to oppression. The translation—it is exceptionally difficult for "animal people" to witness abuse. Some activists even refuse to watch videos about these industries because of their sensitivity.

GOING UNDERCOVER FOR THE ANIMALS

stealthily infiltrating the enemy's stronghold, swooning the beautiful counter-spy while - that's Hollywood. Working undercover is low paying, dirty, difficult and demoralizing -

Meeting the victims, whether on a TV screen or face to face, is heart-wrenching and difficult. However, looking the animals in their eyes and making that connection galvanizes me to be their voice.

No Cloak, No Dagger

Forget the visions of Agent 007 stealthily infiltrating the enemy's stronghold, swooning the beautiful counter-spy while seizing the top secret document - that's Hollywood. Working undercover is low paying, dirty, difficult and demoralizing - quite literally, the shit work.

I'm no adrenaline junkie, but over time I have raised my threshold for dealing with intensely stressful, watch-your-back-side moments. The blips on the radar where my camera comes out of hiding are sparsely drizzled between long hours, days and sometimes weeks of mundane work.

The lows are bottomless, but capturing on video what I had been witnessing day in and out made it all worthwhile. Animal abuse is happening out of sight and mind. Getting these horror stories into the light of day to educate the public and eventually stop the abuse is not easy - but it works.

Undercover 101

There's no training, standard operating procedures or Cliff's Notes. It's about common sense, thinking on your feet, making mistakes, learning from them and, above all, having patience. During interviews, and the first few days on the job when I was in total shock, I reminded myself that this is a normal feeling. "Don't panic" was my mantra. Everyone gets stressed about a new job. Just being myself always got me through the rough spots. Investigating is not acting. It's about listening, being observant, and making meticulous notes.

"Just the facts, ma'am"

The undercover part, documentation, is what happens after the "work day" is over. I would keep little crib notes that I could flesh out later. This was the most tedious but most important part. I learned to record detail without emotion. I finally found it much easier to dictate my notes into a tape recorder. Every undercover investigator should befriend a court reporter for transcription. Mine was a lifesaver.

Getting the Goods

Every situation is different and I would find creative ways to gravitate towards getting what I needed. It's mostly about waiting for opportunities and being prepared when the window opens.

Lessons learned early on were about holding the video camera still, counting slowly to 20, before moving on. Those are some of the longest seconds in my life, but a jumpy shot is worthless. I had a pocket-sized JVC digital with a fold-out screen that made it possible to alternately check the shot and glance over my shoulder.

I used a hidden body cam when another co-worker was present. The technology is getting more sophisticated all the time. Now these units are made fool-proof with vibrators that tell you if your rolling or not or if the camera isn't functioning.

With still camera shots, I learned to shoot the whole roll if I could safely afford the time. It's very challenging to get good stills where caged animals are looking into the lens. I felt lucky to get a couple of good pictures per roll.

Getting Busted

One day at the fox farm, my coworker, who was supposedly sick, suddenly appeared in front of me. My heart was racing because I knew he had seen my camera. Externally calm, I told him my dad wanted to check out the farm and I was making him a tape. He bought it. Another lesson learned - always be ready with a plausible story if the worst case happens.

Surviving It

I haven't become desensitized or shut off from my emotions. However, I have learned to shut down my emotions temporarily to get the job done. It's not a special skill, just a survival mechanism that kicks in on its own. Then, after work, I could lose it on the commute home.

I can't say that I've always handled my anger and depression well. I would never have survived the Primate Center without the support of my partner, Leslie. One thing she often reminded me of was, I had a choice, and the animals have no choices.

I may never fully heal from these experiences. But I don't regret anything I have done and I would probably be compelled to do it again. The feeling of satisfaction from effective activism far outweighs the emotional pain.

OPERATION: ANIMAL FREEDOM

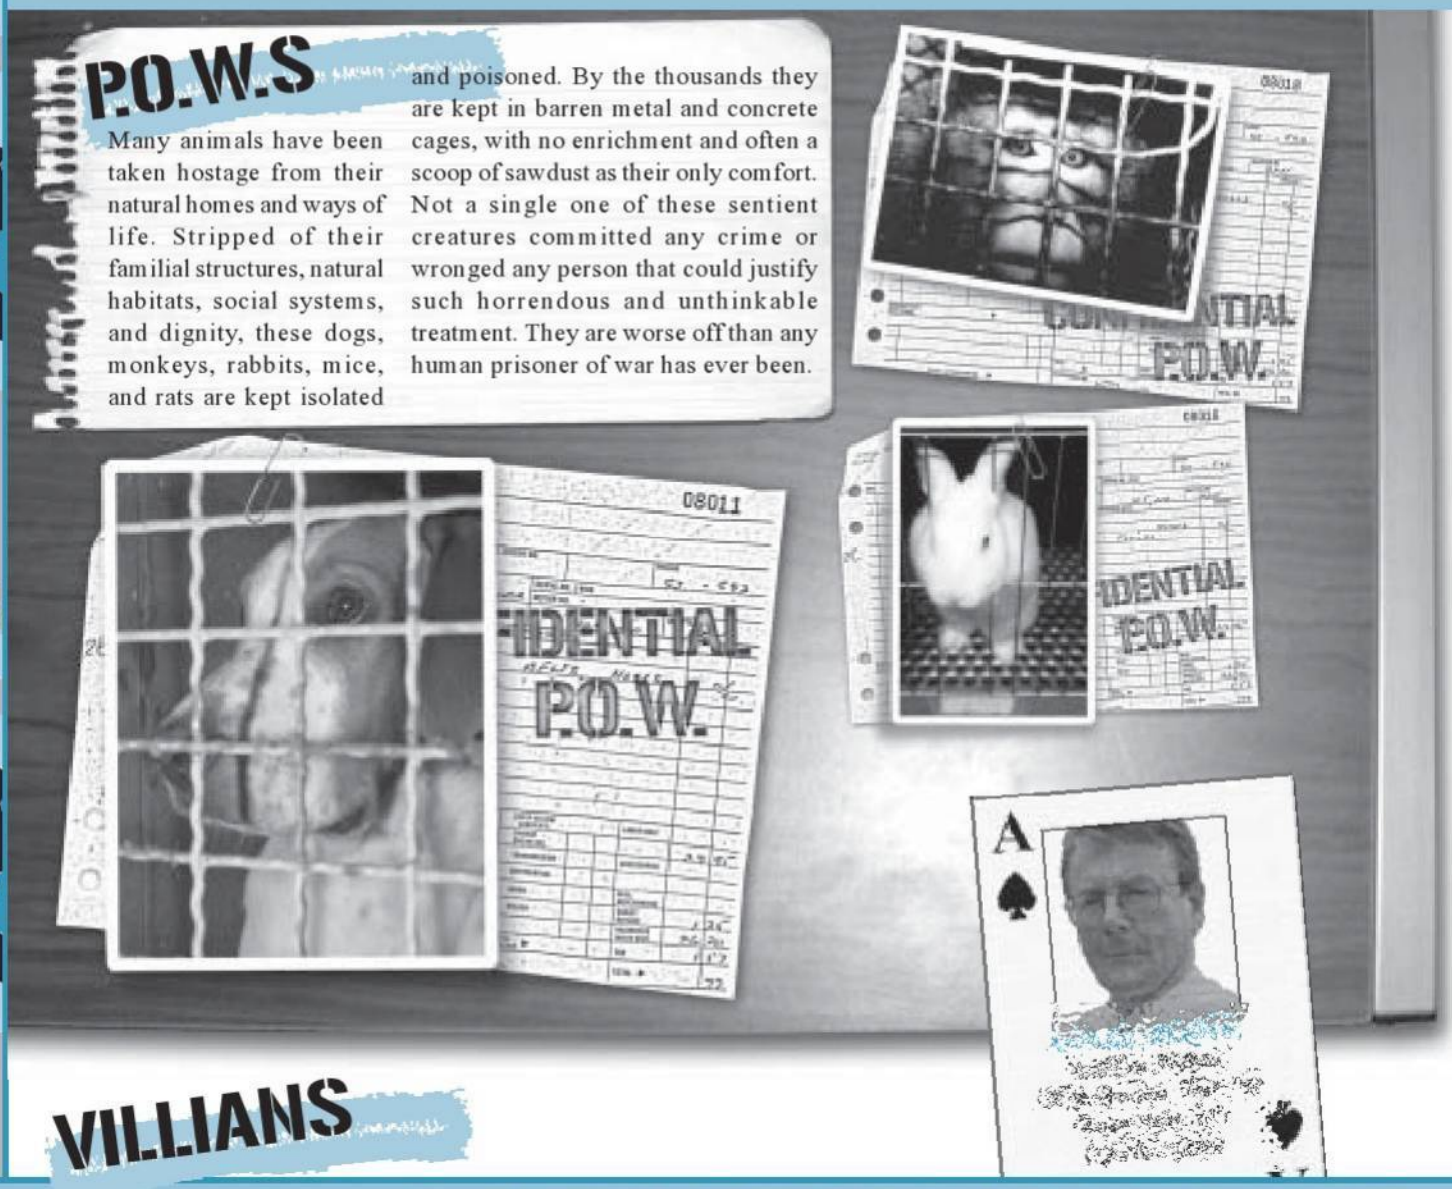

With so much 'war' rhetoric and propaganda currently being pumped out, and with the awesome displays of aggression and military might to topple regimes of 'terror', it is not hard for the compassionate to feel frustrated. One need not look to the far corners of the planet for torture chambers, mass graves, cremation ovens, and weapons of mass destruction that warrant immediate acts of intervention - but only into our own backyards.

Vivisection labs, like HLS, represent a heinous and insidious affront to humanity. The vivisection regime in all countries has systematically enslaved, tortured, and slaughtered countless millions of animals. These company directors are dictators – deciding who lives, and who dies. In breach of the Good Laboratory Practices countless times, and more importantly international norms of decency, Huntingdon Life Sciences is demonstrably the most dangerous within this rogue industry.

The fight to close Huntingdon is a major battle within the war against vivisection. This is a battle that cannot afford to be lost. To use today's vernacular, SHAC presents its 'Fox News' approach to painting this picture. Although some of the ideas are a tad cheeky, the issues and suffering they represent are gravely serious and in need of immediate attention.

P.O.W.S

Many animals have been taken hostage from their natural homes and ways of life. Stripped of their familial structures, natural habitats, social systems, and dignity, these dogs, monkeys, rabbits, mice, and rats are kept isolated and poisoned. By the thousands they are kept in barren metal and concrete cages, with no enrichment and often a scoop of sawdust as their only comfort. Not a single one of these sentient creatures committed any crime or wronged any person that could justify such horrendous and unthinkable treatment. They are worse off than any human prisoner of war has ever been.

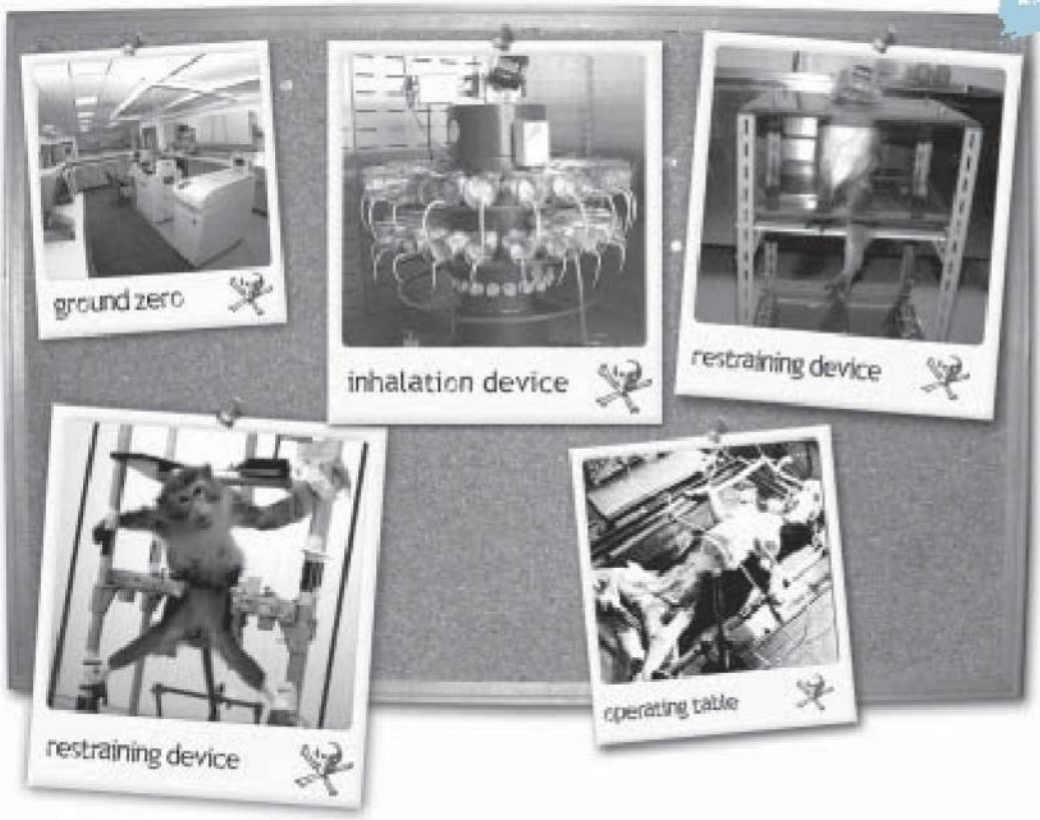

VILLIANS

We have heard so much lately about the new cast of villains for the 21st century. Gorbachev, Noriega, Milosevich are old news. Today former US-trained and funded allies of Saddam Hussein and Osama Bin Laden are the new bad guys. As evil as these bastards may be, the number of lives they have destroyed and taken pales in comparison to that of HLS managers and employees. In just one single day, the latter murder roughly

WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

Meticulously catalogued and touted, Huntingdon and labs like it brag about their means of research. By use of bizarre gassing chambers, medieval restraining devices, razor sharp scalpels, and chemical agents that burn, freeze, and eat away flesh and tissue, HLS tortures animals - it's that simple. These animals are tortured, with what can only be defined as 'weapons,' whose sole purpose is to administer invasive and harmful procedures.

THE TROOPS

The 'Coalition of the Willing (or Killing)' is nothing compared to the ground troops the animal rights movement has deployed in defense of the HLS prisoners. From the ALF breaking into the lab, to activists taking over offices of customers, to investors phonelines ringing off the hook, to angry protestors staging home vigils – the army of the SHAC campaign is marching fearlessly towards animal liberation. If you haven't already, 'enlist' today!

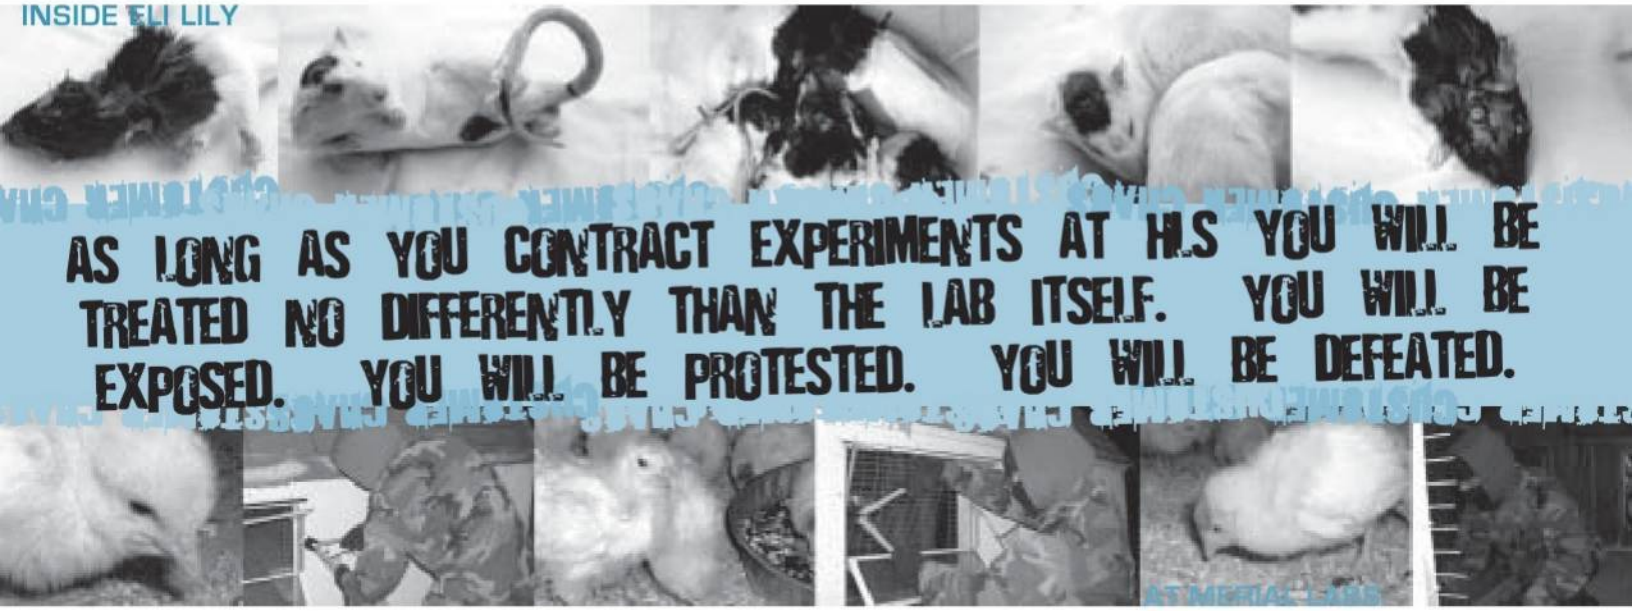

500 innocent lives. That is the equivalent of 4 World Trade Center tragedies a month. The suffering they have caused is immeasurable and needs to be stopped. In keeping with today's method of tracking down war criminals, here is the first installment of the HLS deck of cards!

kureha ★ chiron ★ forest labs ★ sumitomo ★ yamanouchi ★ santen ★ cbc ★ eli lily ★

customer CAMPAIGN CHAOS

It couldn't have kicked off with harder hitting actions. An undercover investigation and an A.L.F. raid began the global campaign against HLS's customers. Now that we (that means YOU!) have driven away nearly every other business connection, HLS's only external support is its customers - the people actually giving HLS money to torture animals! And how do you close a company? Take away the income!!

On February 6, SHAC unveiled an undercover investigation inside Huntingdon customer Eli Lilly (read the report here: http://www.shac.net/ACTION/what/lilly.html). The message was clear: as long as you contract at HLS, you will be treated no differently than the lab itself. You will be exposed. You will be protested. You will be defeated. True to that promise, the A.L.F. showed up a month later and liberated 115 chickens from HLS customer Merial Select Laboratory.

In March, a partial list of HLS's customers and suppliers from 2000-2003 was leaked to SHAC. The timing could not have been more perfect, as activists geared up for the Customer Campaign.

SPOTLIGHT ON THE COAST: CALIFORNIA

california leads the way...

The hotbed of the customer campaign has undoubtedly been California. With a campaign that lasted only a month before obtaining a victory, California activists laid into the biotech company Toxweb with office disruptions, late night sirens and bullhorns, and home demos at CEO Dennis Lanfear's house. One such home visit left an employee's home coverec in red paint! Whoops Toxweb - touched HLS didn't you!

Chiron is another California favorite. Three Chiron head honchos got late night Mother's Day visits from activists wielding personal alarms and stink bombs...similar wake up calls greeted five other employees in one night! It seems many a morning, the communities of Chiron employees have woken up to posters exposing their neighbors and images of animals murdered at IILS. Not to mention dozens of calls in the middle of the night, prompting some Chiron employees to change their numbers the next day!

Serves 'em right. Chiron experiments have yielded the following description from investigators: "...it's so infected [the wound] must have burst open just from the pressure of being held on the cage...bloody pus spurted out and dripped all over the floor."

And SHAC's emphasis on Japanese customers was far from forgotten in California. One visit to Japanese customer Yamanouchi resulted in an office covered in leaflets, stunk up with stink bombs, and employee mail thrown everywhere. A paint attack a week later covered the office and street signs, and threw a little color into the mix!

...and the rest of the US of A COUNTRY FOLLOWS SUIT.

Philly took on Sumitomo with protests that saw employees leaving early to avoid demonstrators and New York boasts of late night visits to the Chariman and CEO of Forest labs and five World Week demos in one day. But Kentucky takes the cake with an AMEC campaign that reached victory after only one action from the paint-weilding ALF!

So many customers, so many locations...No action reports against customers near you? Get out there and make it happen!

started the show...

It began, "In the early morning hours of February 27, 2003, the ALF liberated 115 chickens from Merial Select Laboratory..." And there's been a steady stream of underground activity against HLS customers ever since.

In Sweden a Shell station had its pumps and credit card machines glued and spray painted, BASF had bricks thrown through its windows in England, and the head of Novartis UK had his windows smashed.

Japanese customers have been heavily hit, with a director of Daiichi getting his windows and car smashed up in the UK, directors of both Sankyo and Ashai Glass had their cars paint-stripped and the front of their houses spray painted, and a Yamanouchi director had his house paint bombed in Portugal.

The prize for the "flashiest" action goes to the A.L.F. in Holland where Yamanouchi had its European Headquarters firebombed. And hands down, the funniest action occurred in Germany where a Sumitomo director woke to find he'd been glued into his house after the A.L.F. glued all his locks the night before!

JAPANESE BUSINESS

HLS has long tapped the Japanese market, and works daily in attempts to bolster this sector of its contracts. The following companies are known customers of HLS, some of them longtime clients - until now!

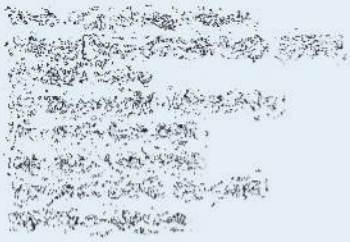

During a biotechnology meeting at the Department of Trade and Industry in the UK, Dr. Frank Bonner (Head of Science and Technology at HLS) testified that "There has been a loss of business due to the animal rights activity. I visited Japan and every client company that I visited is clearly concerned about the environment in this country. They were questioning the appropriateness of conducting research in the UK because of animal rights pressure." And there's no reason they should feel any more comfortable torturing animals in the U.S.!!

CBC AMERICA CORP.

(the U.S., and largest, division of CBC Co., Ltd.)

In 1996 HLS set up a Japanese sales office with CBC Co., Ltd. - a global network of Import/Export, Trading and Distribution companies. CBC owns 50% of HLS's Japanese sales office and is the primary force promoting HLS in the Japanese market - a market HLS has indicated is vital to its survival. CBC is HLS's gateway to dozens of companies in the Japanese market - which is why we need to annihilate it.

CBC America produces organic and synthetic chemicals, CCTV security products, multimedia computer peripherals, commercial floor coverings, plastics and resins. They have sales and distribution centers in New York and California.

Don't be put off by claims that CBC's U.S. offices have nothing to do with HLS. They are all part of a company making money from HLS's animal torture!

YAMANOUCHI

Yamanouchi is possibly the most famous dealer in death at HLS. In 1997 Michele Rokke worked undercover inside of HLS's New Jersey facility. Just before leaving, a contract came in to test an osteoporosis drug. HLS was scheduled to break the legs of 37 beagles with steel wire. The drug was already on the market. At the eleventh hour, PeTA stepped in, armed with celebrity Kim Bassinger, and rescued the dogs. SHAC has documentary proof of Yamanouchi dealing with HLS in 2001.

SUMITOMO

Sumitomo has a longtime relationship with HLS. The company was documented contracting experiments with HLS as early as 1989, during Sarah Kite's investigation, and SHAC has documenation of Sumitomo dealing with HLS in 2001.

FOR YOUR EYES ONLY

"Your mission, if you choose to accept it, is to distract, disrupt, and destroy the ease with which those who criminally abuse animals in 'research' operate. By means of stealth and cunning you must first intimately acquaint yourself with your enemy and then seek to undermine their every effort. Armed with all of today's urban spy techniques you shall act as both a sleuth and provocateur.

This is no assignment for the weak of heart. Great peril exists at every turn. But remember, even greater peril exists for those victims depending on the success of your operation.

Good luck and God Speed!

This newsletter will not self-destruct in 5 seconds... but any evidence attaching you to any of the following tactics should."

TOP SECRET

Since the last newsletter, in which we included an article about building a "smashing movement around a smashing campaign," and suggested ideas on how to start a group and engage in outreach, we have been inundated with emails and letters from people saying that a large mass-movement is nice (and needed), but an "army of one" can and will get the job done. Activists taking action on their own can be powerful. When one can't join a demo, set up an outreach table, and create a group, they are not out of options.

One of the most creative articles we received (and one appropriate to the attitude of this campaign) suggested those of us who can't or don't want to be a part of a big movement instead take a 007 approach to activism. It suggests acting in a James Bond fashion, using COINTELPRO-type tactics to confuse and crack our vivisecting enemy's resolve. This "thinking outside the box" approach demonstrates there are many alternatives and outlets for AR activism.

1 FINDING THE TARGET AND THE HOME ADDRESSES.

* Use the company's website or any promotional materials you can find to locate who sits on the Board of Directors and makes up the management of the company. Also try annual reports and old press archives about the company (at your local library or online). Trace who is quoted and what their position is. 9 times out of 10 you will track down your target.

* Start in the simplest places. Look in the phone book, google the name, or use 411.com. Many targets are business people and don't expect protest pressure and see no reason to keep their listing private.

* For those tough-to-find corporate bastards, use the info-search databases at your nearest university library. Most college libraries (and definitely law and business libraries) give free access to 'Lexus - Nexus.' This is your one stop shop for all public records, from press to legal documents to business filings. By searching the company or the target's name, chances are high you will not only find their current address, but also previous addresses, who they have shared them with, and their neighbors names.

2 KNOW THE WORK-PLACE DYNAMICS.

Besides the chain of command, you are going to want to know their hours, projects, events, facilities, and gossip. Two clever approaches are:

* The Pretext phone calls: Head to a payphone and call your target pretending to be various characters. If you are put through to the secretary you can pretend to be a delivery person with an important document needing immediate attention. Invaluable slip-ups happen and may result in you getting the time your target goes home, which golf club they are at, or even their personal cell number. Even better info can be forthcoming if you actually get your target on the line. And try this with various departments. On one occasion an activist was actually able to find out when a shipment of beagles were being brought into HLS!

* Sport your most generic business outfit and simply do the "walk-through." In big companies, not everyone knows everyone else. Show up to 'work' one day and have a walk around. Make keen observations, look through files, take pictures, and maybe even grab some souvenirs. No company, no matter how security conscious they think they are, is immune. Last year a UK SHAC activist drove her car past security into HLS. An employee of the lab kept the door open for her and she had a good long walk around before barricading herself inside of an office!

3 HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS.

* Neighbors are easily duped and will tell you what your not supposed to know. When the target is not home, swing by the neighbor's house and pretend to be interested in the vintage green jag parked in their driveway. Call them pretending to be from a relative wanting to surprise them with a party and needing to know when they will be home. Or even call acting as a journalist doing a story on animal rights people targeting the folks next door - can they offer any comment on their neighbors?

* One of the most exciting ways to get to know your animal abusing target is to follow them. Which video store and library do they use? Do they belong to a golf or yacht club? Following can be tricky and you must have a reliable source of transportation. Most vivisection and corporate scumbags don't take the train or bus.

ON ONE OCCASION, AN ACTIVIST WAS ACTUALLY ABLE TO FIND OUT WHEN A SHIPMENT OF BEAGLES WERE BEING BROUGHT TO HLS!

WHO'S IN YOUR BACKYARD?

4 TIME FOR ACTION!

Here are just few ideas of what you can do, on your own, with the newly acquired information. Let your imagination run wild.

* "Nacho - Nacho Mail... You have got to use. Nacho Mail."
Visit www.nachomail.com. This site allows you to send emails FROM your target's email address to anyone you'd like, like their friends and colleagues. Think the morning meeting should be cancelled? Go ahead and do it. Maybe its time to fess up to your spouse about having an affair.

* Special Delivery
If you can't make a home demo, don't sweat it. You can still make an impact - on your target's credit. In many magazines there are subscription forms allowing you to start receiving magazines and products while being billed later. Once the unwanted deliveries start pouring in, if your target doesn't take the time to send each parcel back with a cancelled order statement, their credit takes a nose dive. HLS employees have received everything from Playboy Magazine to Precious Moments Figurines. This got so bad for HLS in England that Huntingdon had to hire someone to sort through and send back all the deliveries.

* Smile, You're on Candid Camera!
If you know where your local abuser lives, swing by and wait around to take photos of him or her. The paparazzi do it all the time for movie stars, so why shouldn't we for these celebrities of animal abuse. Maybe catch a glimpse of them in their swimsuits, screaming at their bratty kids, or stealing the neighbor's newspaper.

* Lock up your dogs and cats!
"Warning - A known animal abuser lives at ...." Putting up posters in your target's community is a good way of drawing attention to the vile and secret world of vivisection. This can also cause a great deal of embarrassment to the vivisector. The locals are entitled to know if someone who commits unthinkable acts of barbarism on animals, no different that most people's pets, lives nearby.

If you are more computer inclined, why not build a special website for the vivisector you are after? Expose their dirty laundry, their funny photos, their home address and phone number. Include graphic pictures of the animals they test on and links to other websites that attack the merit of their 'research'. These people deserve as much privacy and dignity as they give to their animal victims.

RECENTLY ALL OF RICHARD MICHAELSON'S HIGH SCHOOL CLASSMATES RECEIVED AN EMAIL FROM THEIR OLD CHUM, ASKING IF ANY OF THEM WOULD ACT AS A CHARACTER WITNESS FOR HIM IN HIS UPCOMING TRIAL FOR MURDER. HOW EMBARASSING!

it's time to DRIVE 'EM NUTS!

These are just a few of the ways to get to know your enemy, and how to get under their skin. There are plenty of other ideas. The point is that you don't have to belong to you local animal rights group or PeTA to have a voice for the animals. Pranks, practical jokes, and an unnerving amount of personal info on your subject can be just as powerful as a national demonstration.

Just as SHAC has demonstrated the brilliant strategy of going after one company at a time whole-heartedly, some of us are taking it a step further and going after one vivisector or pharmaceutical director at a time. Arm yourself with ingenuity and resolve, and get to work. Vivisection can be cracked from an 'Army of Me' to an 'Army of YOU!'

PRETTY GOOD PRIVACY

It's called PGP – Pretty Good Privacy. It's easy, free, and technically unbeatable.

This encryption product is used by British Secret Service and numerous other intelligence and national security agencies. It is a piece of software that the US Military even tried to stop from being exported as they do not have the capabilities of cracking it. The FBI has given its best (and even hired hackers) trying – but to no avail.

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS

PGP is an encryption tool. It takes your message or file and turns it into pure gobbledygook. The only people who can ever read the message or open the file again, are the people to whom it has been encrypted. This is done by some very clever techniques, using 'keys' and passphrases. As long as you chose a good enough passphrase, the encrypted messages are effectively totally private in every sense of the word.

PGP is FREE and works with most operating systems. Download it from www.pgpi.com (get versions 6.5.8 or 8.0). PGP also comes with plug-ins which allow you to integrate it with your favorite email programs to make it even easier to use. If you would rather, SHAC can send you a copy of this software ready to use on a CD.

PGP is not difficult. Once installed, it is a few simple extra button clicks which soon become second nature. You have no reason to be frightened by it, as it is designed to be as user friendly as possible. It is like remembering to lock your front door every time you go out. No other program matches it in terms of ease, security and reputation. Frankly there are no excuses for not using it.

Are you tired of feeling paranoid about your internet security? Has the FBI reading your email got you feeling down? And your roommates – can they access your computer documents and files? Don't you wish there was some sure-fire way of protecting your personal files and private messages so that only you had access to them?

Well, now you can!!

FOR A FREE STEP BY STEP TUTORIAL, VISIT:
www,shac.net/pgp/index.html

WHY PGP IS EFFECTIVE

PGP works with keys. Everyone has a set of keys: a public one, which they pass around to friends, and a private one that no one ever sees.

The public key allows people to encrypt messages to you. It is equivalent to the fact that anyone can close and lock your door. When Bob sends Alice a message he encrypts it to Alice's public key which she has sent him a copy of.

Only the people to whom the message has been encrypted can open it again. When Fred the Fed intercepts Alice's public key and the message Bob has sent Alice, it doesn't matter as he still cannot read it. Only the private key can be used to unlock the message, and only Alice has that.

Even if Fred comes breaking into Alice's house to steal her computer, it still will not help him. This is because to access the private key, he also needs to know Alice's passphrase - which of course is only in her head.

DO I REALLY NEED PGP?

Having PGP encrypt your messages and documents is the equivalent of using an envelope to send letters instead of just mailing postcards. The words behind the sealed folds are for your eyes only – and should remain so. PGP is for everyone. Using it does not mean you have something to hide, or are plotting anything illegal – it is for your everyday matters.

Using it takes no effort, and irritates the peeping eyes of the FBI.

BeAGLE LEGAL

Avoiding Unnecessary Arrests.

As government checks and balances rapidly erode and peaceful protest is rendered "terrorism," the liberties we took for granted just a short time ago seem gone. In the face of such strong repression, it is imperative to remember that, at least as of now, noisy protests, home demos, and call-ins are not illegal - no matter how badly Ashcroft would like us to think they are. On the contrary, peaceful protest, civil disobedience, and vocal support of direct action are all part of a solid history of democratic protest in America. Use the law as a tool. Avoid unnecessary arrests. Know what to look for, where to find it, and how to throw it back at any bonehead cop that threatens to arrest you if you don't give him your name.

"IF YOU DON'T GIVE ME YOUR NAME/ SHOW I.D., I'LL ARREST YOU"

Our personal favorite. Police love to threaten protesters with arrest if they don't tell them who they are. However, you are not required to give your name unless you are suspected of a crime

In the 1967 U.S. Supreme Court case Terry v. Ohio, the court determined that "whenever a police officer accosts an individual and restrains his freedom to walk away, he has 'seized' that person," and, as such, fourth amendment protections against unreasonable searches and seizures become relevant. From the moment an officer has detained you, s/he has "seized" you. The question then becomes 'what constitutes a "reasonable" seizure.' In Terry v. Ohio, the court considers the only test of "reasonableness" is the 'balancing of the need to seize against the invasion which the seize entails.' Let us state - in no uncertain terms - that, in our admittedly unofficial opinion, detaining a person at a peaceful protest where no crime has been committed and demanding his/her I.D. is in no way "reasonable" in a democratic society.

Additionally, in 1974, the Colorado Court of Appeals determined that arresting someone for refusal to show I.D. constitutes false arrest. (Unfortunately this is not from a Supreme Court case, but it is an indication of how courts may rule.)

HOME DEMOS

Protesting at someone's home is perfectly legal. In a 1988 case, Frisby v. Schultz, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a local ordinance curbing home demonstrations. The court ruled that the ordinance prohibited targeted picketing only and did not ban alternative methods (marching, going door-to-door, distributing literature). Hence, it did not prohibit freedom of expression and was therefore constitutional.

If a locality has an ordinance prohibiting stationary protests in front of one home, protesters must keep moving throughout the neighborhood. However, in the more common occurrence that a city has no such ordinance, home demos receive the same constitutional protections as all other demonstrations, and you may stand still, right in front. (Read the complete opinion here: http://www.law.umkc.edu/faculty/projects/ftrials/conlaw/frisby.html). Note: all demonstrations must take place on public property.

SOUND ORDINANCES

Many localities have ordinances regulating sound levels. Often they are particular to amplified sound. Call your local police precinct to inquire about obtaining a sound permit, or go without a megaphone.

EVIDENCE, EVIDENCE, EVIDENCE

Unfortunately the "justice" system is one of reparations. For that reason it is imperative to have evidence of your lawfulness - and of the officer's violation of the law in arresting you. For example, if an officer arrests you, s/he will not charge you with refusal to show ID. Instead you will get some non-descript, arbitrary charge like disorderly conduct. The lesson here: videotape any and all interactions with police. And never talk to an officer alone; always bring another activist with you to act as a witness.

WHERE TO FIND IT:

A little preparation can save you a lot of hassle later on. Visit the Municipal Code Corporation at Municode.com to research local ordinances, public and private property lines, etc. Visit the protest site in advance and anticipate common police confrontations (where you can stand, how loud you can be, etc.). Copy local ordinances if you think it will help you on the spot. Always remember, no case law is perfectly analogous (including that cited here). However, the important thing is to know your rights, stand firm when you know you are obeying the law, and for God's sake - GET THEM ON VIDEO!!

THE FBI HAS DECLARED THEM ONE OF THE BIGGEST DOMESTIC TERRORIST THREATS. WHAT DO THEY THINK?

THEY DON'T GIVE A #@*&!

(and neither do the animals!)

You'd think with the FBI and police crackdown on the ALF there would be more activists in prison and less actions happening. But just the opposite is true. This is partly due to the FBI's incompetence. They can't even prevent jets from crashing into buildings – what makes them think they can stop paint being thrown on doorsteps?! Mostly though, despite the legal repercussions, those engaging in direct action activities do it because they know it is necessary and do not care about the consequences. A simple message to any FBI loser reading this - YOU LOSE! You cannot and will not stop the ALF, no matter what you try. Jail, safety, bad press: They don't give a #@*&!

3/03/03 (UK) Activists sabotage the cars of two separate HLS vivisectiors in their driveways, slashing the tires, stripping the paint and painting one of the houses.

3/23/03 (USA) Activists shot "speeding projectiles" through the windows of Rodney Armstead, head of a shell company for Andrew Baker, head of HLS. They then moved on to E*Trade of Beverly Hills, who "had their front glass door shot out with a single steel ball bearing as the ever-vigilant Beverly Hills police were slacking off 30 yards away."

3/27/03 (USA) ALF redecorates the San Diego home of Claire MacDonald, HLS employee, with gallons of red paint and the words "HLS SCUM" across the garage door. The sidewalls of three tires were punctured.

3/28/03 (USA) Activists visit the home of Philip J. Petito, Controller at CBC America's NY headquarters, leaving it covered in paint and anti-HLS slogans. His SUV and 25 ft boat were left a mess.

3/30/03 (USA) ALF "ninjas" smash out the large front window and glass front doors of CBC America's California Branch Office, and leave spray-painted messages like "500 Animals Daily," and "CBC + HLS = ALF" on the building.

4/14/03 (UK) Activists visited an HLS worker in Diss. They left "loads of leaflets" and a blaring alarm in the gutter. Afterwards, they moved on to CPS fuels, supplier to HLS, where they super-glued locks, left leaflets, and spray-painted "Puppy Killers," "Scum" and "ALF."

4/20/03 (UK) Roy Humphrey's Recovery Trucks, which ferry HLS employees two and fro are vandalized.

4/21/03 (UK) A director of Daiichi, an HLS Japanese customer, had his windows and car smashed at his home in Kent.

4/21/03 (UK) Activists again visit CPS Fuels, spray-painting "Animal Killers" on the wall and "CPS Fuels-Scum" on their newly paneled fence.

4/26/03 (UK) ALF "ninjas" put bricks through the office windows of HLS customer BASF.

4/29/03 (USA) Employees of HLS customer Yamanouchi in Palo Alto, CA were greeted with spray painted messages on the road and street signs telling them that their support of HLS will not be tolerated.

5/02/03 (UK) The director of Sankyo, an HLS client, had paint thrown on his house and two of his cars destroyed with paint-stripper and slashed tires.

5/18/03 (USA) Activists visited the Los Angeles home of Jim DeVico, customer service rep for Toxweb. His front door, front steps, and walkway up to his house were covered with gallons of red paint.

5/25/03 (GERMANY) Hisao Konishi, director of Sumitomo Chemicals, had the locks of his doors and garage glued and his mailbox was filled with construction foam. "Stop HLS" was painted on his white front door.

5/26/03 (HOLLAND) Activists hit Yamanouchi twice in one night, with an arson attack on the house of manager Peter van Brummelen Hilversum, and the corporate headquarters in Leiderdorp

5/26/03 (UK) Throughout the preceding week, CPS Fuels directors had surprise home visits which included alarms being thrown into gutters and hedges, house signs being spray-painted with the word "Killers," and all the roads leading to their houses and offices were spray-painted. A thick chain was put around their gate one morning.

6/6/03 (USA) Rodney Armstead had ear-piercing alarms left in his front yard at 3AM.

6/7/03 (USA) Amec Earth and Enviroment, an HLS customer in Kentucky, had a truck painted, sidewalks covered in slogans, and a bucket of red paint thrown over the front door and steps.
