stop huntingdon animal cruelty newsletter

volume 2, issue 2, spring 2002

In our last newsletter, we outlined a "Blueprint for Bankruptcy," detailing the latest targets in the campaign to close Huntingdon. In just a few short weeks, activists across the country knocked out Charles Schwab, Quilcap, State Street, Hughes Enterprises, and U.S. Foodservices! Marsh remains standing...for now. Put simply, we are winning.

Victory has been ours in every battle in this war against Huntingdon because we are creative, and because we have taken the time to learn the system-not become part of it-and have used that knowledge to dismantle the structure that props HLS up. When HLS and its supporters found ways to rebuild or fortify that structure, we learned how to dismantle those as well. The new beams of support are being identified and every detail about them recorded. We again are schooling ourselves on the quickest and most effective ways to knock out the foundation.

EDITORIAL

"THEY SUE US. WE LAUGH. THEY THROW US IN JAIL. WE ENJOY THE TIME OFF. THEY GET RESTRAINING ORDERS. AND WE GET CREATIVE. ... MAKE NO MISTAKE. THIS IS A CALL TO DIRECT ACTION."

HLS and its collaborators have pulled out all the stops-lawsuits, restraining orders, criminal charges - reaching out for the big boys in government to help out. Unfortunately for HLS, they have already exhausted all the weapons in their arsenal. More unfortunate for them is that we have barely tapped into our stockpile of weaponry. And, if their weak attempts at fending off the animal rights movement have achieved anything, they have demonstrated that they cannot outgun us.

They sue us. We laugh. They throw us in jail. We enjoy the time off. They get restraining orders. And we get creative.

People often ask us what we could do in the future to avoid facing lawsuits. The answer is simple-be ineffective. Every time a few inches of legal paperwork comes our way, we congratulate ourselves. We have gotten under their skin, so much that they are willing to pay upwards of $100,000 to try to stop us. Try they might.

We get creative. With activist's free speech rights limited by myriad court orders, the question becomes, If engaging in ordinary picketing is going to land me in jail, why not push the limits a little further? Whether it means setting off decibel alarm bombs at conferences, engaging in electronic sit-ins, posting employees mother's maiden names on the internet, or simply greeting a worker at home at 3 a.m. with megaphones and whistles, activists are taking the anti-HLS message, adopting it, and engaging in guerrilla warfare tactics against the lab and its collaborators. Hey puppy killers, you can't restrain what you can't catch! If you didn't like traditional free speech tactics being employed against you, just wait until you see what the animal rights movement has in store for you now!

Make no mistake. This is a call to direct action. Whatever your conscience tells you to do when you watch the video of those puppies being punched, that monkey being dissected alive, those workers laughing at the pain of the animals they mutilate and kill-go out and do it. Hit Marsh, the suppliers, CBC, the lab itself, and hit them hard. Just remember, be creative, be relentless and BE CAREFUL!

THE ONE THAT GOT AWAY

In September of 1997 40 dogs were freed from Huntingdon Life Sciences after the lab capitulated to a public pressure campaign. Championed by countless media outlets, an US Senator, the movie star Kim Bassinger, and outraged people across the country, 40 dogs that were destined to have their legs broken for an Osteoporosis drug for Yamanouchi (which was already tested and on the market in Japan) became an instant hot-button issue. Michelle Rokke's undercover investigation tracked the terrible story of these abused animals from the breeding facility in Wisconsin where they were kept in complete darkness during their first year to their selection for use in this study because they were the rejects of the litter – all mismatched in size and weight and only similar in their age.

According to the reports kept by Michelle, these dogs where kept at Huntingdon for months before use – because they were all sick – with horrible sores on their paws, ear mites, and had behavioral problems. The lab techs would seldom clean their cages because these dogs would do everything in their power to avoid being picked up. Their unjust and unnecessary plight caught the attention of the world and helped secure their liberation.

This is the story of Maggie – one of the lucky, and few – dogs to have ever escaped a life of agony and death at Huntingdon Life Sciences. She is a happy, healthy, and very loved companion to a local New Jersey resident who lives only five minutes from her former prison.

Maggie spent her first two years in a kennel-cage, never being house trained or receiving any healthy socialization. Maggie to this day has very sensitive and soar feet, a likely by product of living in a cage with slated metal floors.

A local dog lover and animal welfare supporter, who followed the story of these dogs in the local newspaper, adopted Maggie. Having lived with a beagle before she had a special place in her heart for this type of animal and was one of the hundreds that filled out an application for the dogs. Upon picking this lucky little beagle up from the SPCA, Maggie's new human companion noted how all the beagles from HLS were cuddled up together in a small corner, not knowing what lay ahead of them and how to learn to trust people again after their time in HLS.

Fortunately Maggie has acclimated quite well to her now home. But there were a few bumps in the journey to a normal life. Maggie was at first scared of the TV, she still cannot cope well with motion, and craves constant attention and affection. Otherwise she gets along fine with the other dogs she now shares her life with, is friendly with people, and loves playing in her backyard with a tennis ball. She is a quirky little animal that loves eating bananas and sleeping nose to nose with the other dogs and people up at the pillow's top.

Maggie is an example and a reminder that these animals suffering inside of HLS are NO different. HLS and all other cowardly vivisectors use beagle dogs like Maggie because of their gentle and friendly nature. No matter what you do to a beagle – they will never try to bite your face off. They want nothing more than love and affection.

While reading this, feel good that our actions so far in exposing HLS have saved a handful of lives – but let us never rest in our mission to shut down HLS until all the imprisoned animals have the same opportunity for happiness that Maggie now enjoys.

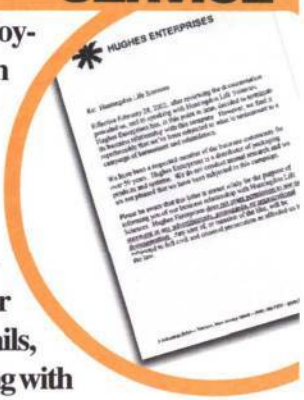

NEWS ...from coast to coast

STATE STREET DIVESTS

Just one day after activists in Boston gave State Street CEO David Spina a 3 a.m. wakeup call with megaphones and chanting, State Street released a letter indicating that it no longer holds shares in HLS. Apparently, the campaign was more than State Street could handle!

NO JANITORIAL SERVICE

It looks like HLS employees will be scrubbing their own toilets, after their janitorial service, Hughes Enterprises announced it would be pulling its contract with HLS. In the last newsletter, Hughes was identified as an HLS collaborator and inundated with calls, e-mails, faxes, and letters. After meeting with SHAC representatives, Hughes agreed it was time to call it quits with HLS.

QUILCAP CAVES

As we went to press last issue, we learned, through SEC filings, that Quilcap had caved. After months of protesting against the company, which climaxed when a protester at the World Economic Forum smashed the windows of the CEO's apartment building, Quilcap dropped HLS. Like all of the lab's shareholders, Quilcap learned the hard way that its just not worth it (its actually not worth anything—just a few cents a share).

HLS WORKERS TO GO HUNGRY?

Not only will HLS employees now be cleaning their own filth, they'll also be brown bagging lunch, as U.S. Foodservice cut their food contract. No friends, no funds, no food...what's a lab to do?

FINANCIALLY BLACKLISTED

The world's biggest stockbroker, Charles Schwab, has thrown in the towel on HLS. On March 31st, the company sent a letter to its customers who hold shares in HLS stating the shareholders must either sell their shares, or transfer them somewhere else. If Charles Schwab can rid itself of HLS, so can the other brokers!

Go get 'em!

LAB ATTACK AT CONFERENCE

As the campaign identifies and takes down every HLS supporter, the lab is busy trying to reconstruct itself in the pharmaceutical world. In March, at the Society of Toxicology conference in Nashville, TN, HLS thought it was at home amongst the biomedical community. Unfortunately for HLS, the lab seems to forget that we are everywhere! Activists descended on the conference and sabotaged HLS's gigantic display, leaving their area resembling their company—in shambles!

HAPPY EASTER! NO MARKET MAKER!

After four months on the U.S. market, it seemed as though Huntingdon had finally managed to muster a market maker. Isolated in Colorado, and with a sound record of questionable financial dealings to back them up, Spencer Edwards seemed a perfect match. No matter how many times we remind them, HLS always seems to forget that WE ARE EVERYWHERE! Within a week of Spencer Edwards's debut as a market maker for HLS, activists hammered the firm and its employees' homes with phone calls, e-mails, and faxes.

Not to be deterred by HLS's usual attempts to hide their collaborators, activists descended on Colorado, home to SE offices. On Easter Sunday activists paid a surprise visit to Spencer Edwards executives at their homes. The following day, the message that making a market for HLS will not be tolerated was driven home with a visit to SE's offices. After one week of campaigning, SE capitulated, leaving HLS once again up the creek without a market maker.

AETNA OUT

SHAC launched a campaign against Aetna after one of their employees leaked information to us that Aetna provided health insurance for HLS employees. After a few short weeks of campaigning against them, Aetna released a letter stating the company no longer provides insurance to HLS. Another one bites the dust!

ARE YOU MAKING NEWS?

If so - we want to know about it! Send us your write-ups, pictures, stories, news clippings etc. Tears won't be enough to shut down HLS - take action and be a part of history!

2001 ANNUAL REPORT -at a glance

Some figures on how HLS just keeps doing worse:

Recently HLS has put out some financial results which it has spun to make itself look good in the unlikely event it ever gets a market maker. Although the 2001 results, as expected, are better than for 2000, they are still worse than they were in 1999. Here are a few numbers showing just how bad they are doing.

•Revenue has increased by 3.38%, something HLS is proud of, but this barely exceeds inflation. HLS neglects to highlight that the expenses associated with these revenues grew at a much faster rate of 5.17%, resulting in the largest operating loss since 1998 of $3,546,000. Operating costs are the costs associated with the day to day running of the buisiness.

•The overall net loss, with all expenses take into account, is of $8,446,000 - 21.8% higher than 1999.

•Total debt increased from $50 million in 2000 to a massive $88,123,000 in 2001, an increase of over 75%. For the first time the company's liabilities exceed it assets.

•HLS is now using an accounting system, known as EBITDA, designed for companies anxious to hide their true position in order to placate shareholders and possibly attract more investment. Hidden away in this set of financial results is a potential liability of $14,364,000 in deferred income taxes which, combined with their disclosed operating loss, would make a total loss for 2001 of $22,810,000 which is equal to $1.9 million a MONTH.

•In order for HLS to break even, they need to increase business by a huge 22%, and that is if they can achieve the impossible task of keeping every other cost static. HLS is bleeding dry.

•There is talk of HLS results for the last quarter of 2001 as showing a recovery. HLS has not issued a full set of results for this period in so that we can judge this potential miracle. There has been an increase in revenue for this period, but again, constructive accounting is hiding the true picture where a whole lot of other costs have been factored out to make them look better.

*GREET THE WORKERS, HLS

WORLD WEEK for

MARCHING TO HLS

NEW YORK CITY

Sunday April 21st: Sunday saw a kicking (literally) start to the demos making up World Week for Animals In Laboratories as the homes of two Marsh directors in New York City were visited by protestors.

Protesters assembled at the house of John Regan, [redacted] loudly informing the very posh, Upper East Side district along Central Park that a man involved in animal torture lived among them. The doormen of the surrounding buildings joined passers-by to learn about the gruesome business their neighbor is involved in.

Allegedly protesters tried to gain entry to the building to make sure that Mr. Regan was fully informed. Both front doors went down in a waterfall of glass as protesters took off in every direction before regrouping at the next target.

The next Marsh executive to hear from the protesters was Leanard P. Kline [redacted] who apparently received the same treatment. Again the neighborhood was filled with angry voices denouncing the animal abuser who lived there.

Within seconds, protesters allegedly gained entrance to the elegant lobby of Mr. Kline's Park Avenue building. Reports have come back of lamps flying through the air, chairs and tables flipped, and fancy vases that ended up in pieces. As protesters dispersed, both of Mr. Kline's glass doors went out as well. According to one protester, "To say they [the doors] exploded, is an understatement." The doorman was left behind on the street, his hands waving in the air in shock.

Nine people were arrested, held overnight, and released on their own recognizance the next morning on 2 felony charges (2 counts each), including inciting a riot and criminal mischief, and 3 misdemeanors.

This was a brilliant start to actions on the East Coast to mark the week of action in the name of the hundreds of thousands of animals currently awaiting painful deaths in vivisection laboratories across the country.

Marsh, take a lesson from Stephens (and their pitiful RICO suit that has done nothing to stop this campaign), and the countless other companies who have seen the wisdom in repudiating any business deals with the horror that is Huntingdon Life Sciences: There will be no respite until you sever ties with HLS.

"Those who make peaceful revolution impossible, will make violent revolution inevitable." -John F. Kennedy.

Monday April 22nd: On Monday, activists from all over the East Coast and the midwest rallied in Princeton town center to inform the community of the horrors taking place in their backyard. Protesters marched through the downtown area chanting and handing out stacks of literature to concerned citizens. The police tried to say it was illegal to march and even hand out leaflets, but we activists refused to back down from our first ammendment right, and eventually the police left us alone.

Afterwards protesters paid a visit to Darioush Dadgar's home, the Vice President of Analytical Services at HLS, letting his neighbors know what he is responsible for inside of HLS.

They day ended with a very loud demonstration at Huntingdon Life Sciences. Constant noise, sirens, yelling and whistles were heard for 2 hours straight. Every HLS employee was informed they would be out of a job soon as they slowly trickled out to their cars. They got more than an earful from activists.

WWAL MARCH

HOUSTON

Friday April 26th: Activists from all over the state of Texas, and even some from Oklahoma, gathered to descend upon the main Houston offices of Marsh Inc. (and their subsidiaries), along with the building of one of HLS's top investors, Morgan Stanley Dean Witter. The protests went smoothly, no one was arrested, but the FBI (RodneyB. Hill and co.) and the police were present with their usual displays of useless intimidation that really made for a good laugh. Marsh Inc. lawyers burst in to a vegan lunch, trespassing at our meeting space, prior to the protests with a court order proving their fear of the HLS campaign.

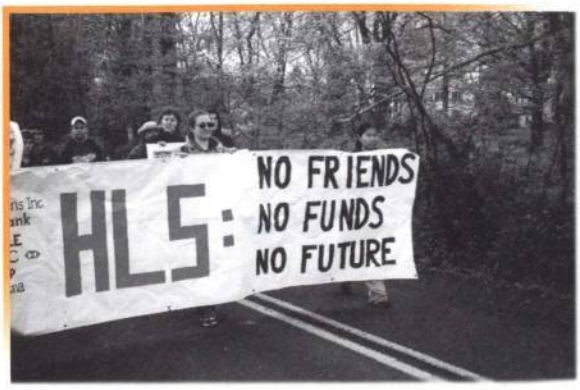

Saturday 27th: Morgan Stanley Dean Witter and Marsh employee's houses were visited with as close to 50 activists gathered in their front lawns. Steve Trauber [redacted] of MSDW was the first of three scumbags visited this day.

> "ACCORDING TO ONE PROTESTER, "TO SAY THEY (THE DOORS) EXPLODED, IS AN UNDERSTATEMENT."

Jim O'Shaughnessey [redacted] was nice enough to be at home for the second visit.

As always, protesters were one step ahead of the police and Marsh, arriving at the home of John D. Tuley [redacted] without any police presence. To our surprise, John was unwilling to answer the door when activists knocked and called him out. As more and more police arrived, activists were informed they should cease and desist from our riot before arrests were made. The chanting of the crowd drowned out the directives of the police, a clear indication that Marsh's weak attempts at curbing our activities is as ineffective as their lawsuits and restraining orders. When will the puppy killers realize that we are motivated by compassion, not money?! John diligently attempted photo documentation through his mini-blinds. At this point, activists began a lively parade around John's neighborhood, informing local residents of their murdering neighbor. One final return informed John that he would not rest until Marsh, Inc. drops HLS.

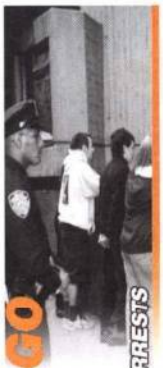

No rest for the wicked scumbags!

WWAL ARRESTS

CHICAGO

For 3 days, events for World Week for Animals in laboratories took Chicago by storm. Activists from all over the midwest converged in Chicago to let Marsh Inc. know that as long as they continue to supply insurance to Huntingdon Life Sciences that they will have to answer to us.

Thursday, April 25th: Activists paid visits to the homes of Marsh employees and let them know just what was in store for them over the next few days. Activists chanted outside of homes and plastered neighborhoods with posters letting people know that their neighbor is directly responsible for the deaths of over 500 animals every single day.

Friday, April 26th: Activists met up to protest against March Inc. They were met by hordes of police officers, private investigators & Marsh lawyers. Unwilling to be intimidated, the activists left to pay a visit to the 2 Chicago offices of Marsh, and let them know exactly what they thought of their association with HLS. Police and security guards lined the entrances of both buildings. But, despite the strong police presence, activists refused to be scared and made their voices heard. A clear message was sent that no matter what the odds, no matter how many people may stand in our way, we aren't going to quit until HLS is closed.

Saturday, April 27th: Activists payed a visit to the home of Victoria Szott, a Marsh Inc. executive who lives at [redacted] IL. The activists chanted and let Victoria know that the animals inside HLS receive no rest, and as long as they are suffering, Victoria and her co-workers won't rest either.

> "THREE HOME DEMONSTRATIONS WERE EFFECTIVELY CARRIED OUT, WITH NO ARRESTS AND ONLY ONE FIST FIGHT FROM AN IRATE SPOUSE."

After 3 days of activists outside their offices, outside of their homes, putting posters throughout their neighborhoods and hundreds of phone calls to their offices and homes, Marsh knows that we aren't going away and that as long as they insure the death of 180,000 animals every single year, we will do everything in our power to make their lives a living hell. Everyone that we have come up against has crumbled under the pressure of this campaign - Marsh Inc. is no different. HLS will be closed. It isn't a matter of "if", it's a matter of "when". The 500 animals that died today, and the 500 that will die tomorrow have no time to wait. Go out and SMASH HLS!

E*TRADE ROOFTOP DEMO

SAN FRANCISCO

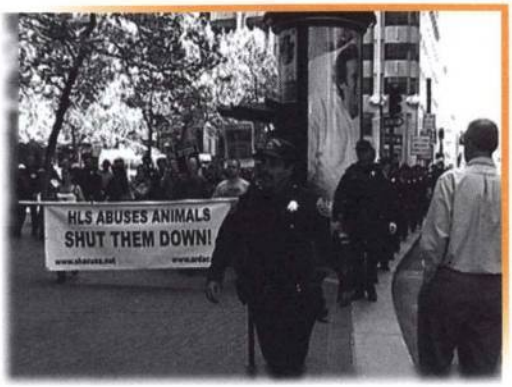

Activists from up and down the West coast, traveling from as far as Seattle, Los Angeles, and Tucson, Arizona, converged in San Francisco on the third weekend of April to clobber HLS collaborators. Hosted by the Animal Rights Direct Action Coalition, a group famous for its no nonsense approach to confronting animal cruelty, the three day series of events successfully educated many on the barbarity of vivisection and left those companies and directors that choose to ally themselves with this sinking labseverely unsettled (and feeling exposed).

Saturday April 20th: Activists and community members gathered in Berkeley to hear presentations given by medical experts, a former vivisection poster child, an undercover investigator, direct action proponents, and a SHAC spokesperson on why vivisection is fraud and ways we can directly stop this abhorrent industry. The conference was well attended, well fed, and participants walked away feeling angry, empowered, and ready to smash HLS.

Sunday, April 21th: Sunday's demonstrations were powerful and effective as campaigners brought the ruckus to the personal doorsteps of those who work for Marsh. Home demonstrations serve as a powerful tool to let those companies know that we will not let their corrupt business decisions to support animal torture at HLS remain in the boardroom. Several shocked neighbors came out as bullhorns and leaflets exposed the scandalous Marsh employees in their neighborhoods. Three home demonstrations were effectively carried out, with no arrests and only one fist fight from an irate spouse.

Monday, April 22nd: Monday was the culmination of the weekend of action against HLS and the months of preparation. Over 100 people attended the march and rally in downtown San Francisco. A procession of demonstrators snaked through the streets of the financial district making stops at the offices of Marsh, E*Trade, and Quick & Reilly (the latter two acting as stockbrokers for HLS shares.) At each stop activists loudly and clearly brought the message that HLS's collaborators (through shares or insurance) will be treated no differently than the lab. Each stop saw activists loudly and furiously attack the buildings and property as a window was smashed at Marsh, people broke inside of Quick and Reilly, and an activist scaled the side of an E*Trade office and held a rooftop demonstration.

The march ended with participants leaving inspired and ready to take their anger home with them - to continue the fight from their phones, emails, faxes, and outside their local Marsh and E*Trade offices. The message had been sent that the West Coast would be no safe bastion for those that make the daily atrocities at HLS possible. HLS is the focus and priority, and not only for those in England and on the East Coast by the lab, but for all of us everywhere that are ready to deliver one of the most damaging and needed blows against the bloody vivisection industry. Future protests will happen until E*Trade, Marsh, and Quick & Reilly pull their support of HLS, or HLS closes—which ever one comes first.

Over 100 activists are almost outnumbered by police as they take over downtown San Francisco

THROWING A WRENCH

Any company depends on money flowing in order to pay its workers and carry out its business. Normally this is in the form of loans and credit. For a public company with shares being traded, this is tied up with the company's shareprice.

So, to have economic sabotage in a nutshell, you kick away the supporting structure for the money flow. That is, get the loan companies to demand their money back and make their shareprice worthless so it becomes much harder to replace loans.

It is easier to take on and inflict more damge to the systems supporting HLS, than HLS itself. This is because most of the companies which supply the support do not want the hassle, have too much to lose and frankly, it matters very little to them whether HLS sinks or swims.

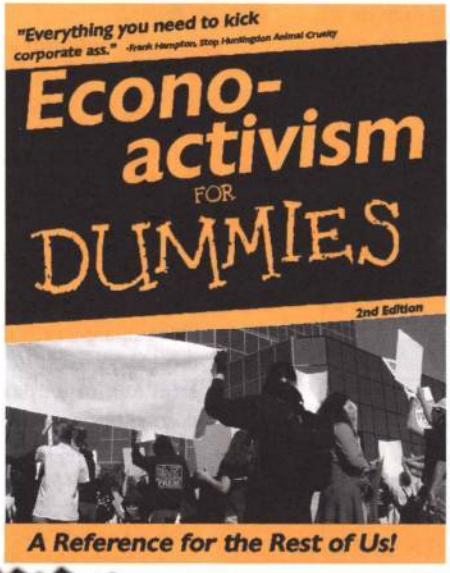

We are chipping away at all companies providing support for HLS as and when we find them. Everyone from stockbrokers who help people deal in the shares, the market makers which would allow them a presence on the stock markets in the first place, to anyone with shares already in them. Every link in the chain is targeted.

The aim is to destroy HLS's presence in the world of finance; make them essentially a non-company when it comes to investors looking to put money into them. And, as the directors are partially paid in shares, they will not receive their full wage package either.

Every company that pulls out, helps cripple HLS's finances further. Eventually it will get to the point where HLS can no longer operate, and in conjunction with all the other actions taking place against the lab, will force it into bankruptcy. Already from the accounts we see HLS has been forced into enormous debts, the repayment of which are hurting the lab terribly as it is not getting in enough orders to repay the interest alone.

If HLS has any extra expenses that it has not budgeted for, need to modernize or expand, then they need to raise the money. If they are in financial difficulties already, or have no share price to back the loans on, then that money will not be forthcoming. We can already see that they are encountering such difficulties in that the directors are having to put their own money into the company. This is not a sustainable situation for them.

The key now is to keep costing them money for things that they have not budgeted for, as there will eventually be one expense to many. It is a simple but effective system; it is not attacking capitalism, but using it against itself. Go get busy.

> "IT IS NOT ATTACKING CAPITALISM, BUT USING IT AGAINST ITSELF"

ECONO ACTIVISM -at a glance

- Stock Market: an official place where the buying and selling of shares is controlled. Each stock market requires the company to fulfill regulations. A company registered on a stock market is said to be quoted.
- Public Company: a company quoted on a stock market is a public company; anyone can buy and sell shares in it. Otherwise the company is considered a private company.
- Ticker: the symbol by which a company is represented on a stock market: for HLS it is now LSRI.
- Market Maker: a company registered as buying and selling the shares of a company. For most stock markets a company is required to have a market maker. Spencer Edwards is a market maker company.
- Stockbroker: a company that acts on behalf of others to do the actual buying and selling of shares, normally achieved by approaching market makers. E*Trade is a stockbroker.
- Pink Sheets: a stock market where shares go, having dropped off all other stock markets. Poorly regulated, but a company needs to have had a market maker at one stage to qualify for it; because of the LSR deal Huntingdon is only unofficially listed.
- Grey Market/Other OTC: not a stock market at all. Any company that is not represented on a stock market or the Pink Sheets, but has trades in its shares, is lumped in this category. Occasionally these trades are reported on the Pink Sheets if a ticker symbol has been arranged, but most of the trades go unreported. When a company reaches this state it is very hard to buy and sell shares in it. Huntingdon/Life Sciences Research is currently in this category. They have not achieved a stock market listing and they are stuck in a strange limbo where they are essentially a private company.

IN THE GEARS

Bringing HLS's operational gears to a grinding halt involves two things: a basic understanding of the machinery, and the tools to dismantle it. To your left you've been given the crash course in what a business needs to maintain financial viability - below are a few of the mechanical structures keeping HLS running. Armed with the tools we know best - the hammer, wrench, and saw of an urban activist - lets phone, fax, email, and protest HLS into an irreparable state.

IT'S MONKEY WRENCHING TIME!

FRUSTRATE THE FINANCES

With Charles Schwab setting the precedent E*Trade has no excuse to continue acting as a stockbroker for shares in HLS. No stockbroker means no fluidity in trades, no shareprice, and no money.

CREMATE THE CREMATORY

Abbey Glen is responsible for disposing of HLS's dirty work. Every week an Abbey Glen truck picks up the bloody remains of what used to be beautiful animals before HLS got their filthy hands on them. Abbey Glen, whose primary business is a pet cemetery - should demonstrate its compassion for animals and sever ties immediately with HLS.

CUTTING OFF THE CUSTOMERS

The Japanese market is an important area into which HLS is trying to expand. This Japanese company (which has two US offices) contracts work out at HLS and does %50 of the marketing to other Asian companies for HLS. Tinkering with their business directly impacts HLS's business. Be relentless, merciless, and victorious.

SHAC AROUND THE WORLD -at a glance

Determined to leave no stone unturned, the Stop Huntingdon Animal Cruelty campaign spans several countries and continents – confronting HLS and its collaborators wherever they rear their ugly heads. In the last newsletter we introduced you to a few of the groups across the USA working on the HLS campaign – this time around we're showing you the world.

Every time HLS loses an investor, a customer, a supplier, or an employee – the international animal rights movement gets another activist, starts another SHAC chapter, is featured in another media article, and inches another step closer to animal liberation. Every day our numbers, resources, and resolve to shut down this vile animal testing lab grows by leaps and bounds while HLS is continually worn down, abandoned, and weakened.

UNDERCOVER IN FRANCE

HLS IN GERMANY

Just as the UK and the US animal rights movements have been galvanized under the SHAC campaign – the worldwide movement is now becoming united as a strong, cohesive, fighting unit. Never before has an animal rights campaign been fought on so many fronts. Tactically and geographically, HLS has become a universal target – a symbol for all that is wrong with animal experimentation. An example is being made of HLS by advocates everywhere that, as a whole, the animal rights movement is strong and it's time to start flexing our muscles.

GLAXO IN NEW ZEALAND

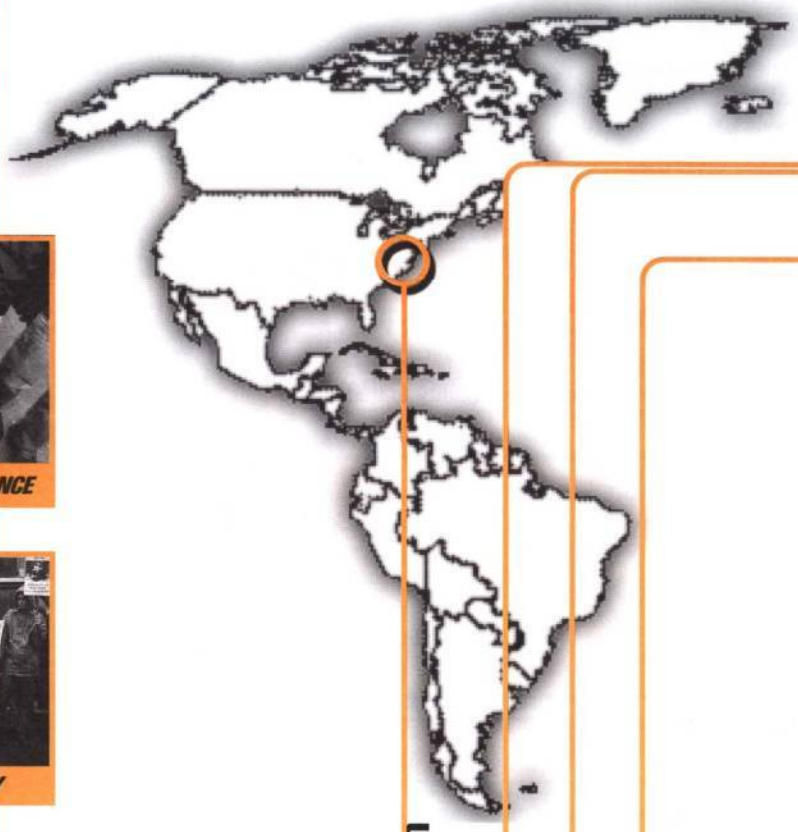

MARSH IN GERMANY

With right as our might, the campaign to close down HLS knows no boundaries and will never relent. For HLS, there is quite literally, "no where to run – and no where to hide!"

SHACUK

EDITORIAL

In the past few months the campaign to finish HLS has spread its wings across the world. Not only are there SHAC USA and SHAC UK but now we have SHAC New Zealand, SHAC Italia, SHAC Deutschland, SHAC France, SHAC Czech Republic and many other groups across the world joining in to destroy the monsters once and for all. This campaign is contagious; anybody and everybody who hears about the vile practices of HLS and the amazing actions taking place against it wants to jump on board and play their part in history.

HLS has learned the hard way that no matter where they are they will be taken apart bit by bit. The whole world is looking to the USA and seeing that HLS really does have nowhere to run and animal abusers everywhere are learning the hard way that you do not run from the global animal rights movement - you give in to us and only then will you be left in peace.

NEWS

Marsh have been hit harder than any HLS collaborator has in a long time. With pickets, rooftop demos, run-ins and leafleting happening on an almost daily basis outside their offices up and down the UK. There have been some cracking actions - 15 activists ransacked the offices of Marsh in Exeter and unplugged everything in sight and emptied the filing cabinets all over the floor. In Newcastle activists dressed as monkeys cut the power supply to the whole of Marsh's office block. Employees were locked out for hours in Birmingham when campaigners d-locked the doors together. In Exeter, hammer brandishing activists put all of the windows in the building through. Activists were arrested after a huge revolving door at Marsh's London HQ was smashed during a run-in, and a tour of the country saw large, noisy demos outside (and inside!) a number of Marsh's key offices. Demos have taken place outside the homes of office managers and their mobile phone numbers have been plastered all over the web for the world to see. Marsh has had it hard across the globe, but in order to make them pull out we need to become far more personal and far more savage - you know who they are and you know where they live so don't let them get away with it!

In recent weeks the ALF have been busy attacking the shareholders. Cars have been paint stripped, houses have been painted and, above all, the animal killers have been singled out and exposed. One shareholder appeared on national television as an act of defiance to the ALF bleating about how she will never give in - well Jean Patricia Hall of [redacted] Middlesex, UK, we'll see who wins!

The ALF have also been busy around the labs themselves, painting slogans and telephone numbers of workers all over motorway bridges, roads, road signs and anything they can get their hands on. Wording such as "Baseball Bats R Us" and "We know where you live" has been spotted.

An amazing day of action saw loads of arrests and loads of mayhem for animal killers as 100 protesters met up at the premises of HLS's meat supplier before pushing past police and gaining access to the compound. The helicopter arrived and people moved on to HLS's beagle supplier Interfauna. People ran straight into the fields and wasted no time in trying to scale the fence. One activist got over the razor wire and on to the roof of the puppy unit for several hours before being removed. Several more arrests were made in the ruckus that arose from the police trying to take him away to the police station. On to workers homes across Cambridgeshire where damage was caused and more arrests were made by the army of police who were now on our tail. More suppliers were hit and then it was onto the lab where the workers were leaving and people went mental. More arrests were made and people moved on to carry the home visits on into the night. One of the best demos in a long time! When will the authorities come to learn that getting locked up is no price to pay for our actions? They lock us up and let us go which, sadly, cannot be said for the animals dying inside HLS.

HUNDREDS OF ACTIVISTS TAKE TO THE STREETS FOR WWAIL - UK

Two protesters used fake IDs to get into a partly HLS sponsored conference on Biotechnology and how the industry must defend themselves against activists. Much to their horror, after all of this waffle, the duo stood up and began to inform the packed room all about HLS and how this disgrace of a company has got to go before they were removed by security.

World day saw our fury switch to the HLS labs at Occold in Suffolk. In the build up to world day the pickets and home demos stepped up at Occold and on the day itself 500 activists met up in nearby Diss for a rowdy march through the home town of the workers followed by a visit to the lab. Activists stormed into the fields and began to cut the perimeter fence down. The police arrived in force and stopped the fun but there's always next time! People then scattered to hit various sickos including employees in their homes, HLS's vet and A Tuck and Sons (HLS Rat Breeder).

HLS suppliers have had it in the neck as well. Stink bombs, demos, run ins and phone call after phone call have ensured that the local business world knows of the trouble that will happen if we find out they have anything to do with HLS.

We must never lose our anger and we must never take our eyes off the target: Huntingdon Life Sciences are filthy animal abusers and for that it is up to each and every one of us to do all in our power to make them pay for it.

DIRECT ACTION

STRIKE HARD, STRIKE FAST

There's no denying it. In each newsletter, the list of actions gets longer and stronger. Every lawsuit, injunction and arrest is met with an action that thumbs its nose at whatever happens to be HLS's current litigation against SHAC.

All the police and injunctions in the world could not have protected HLS and its cronies from the list of actions below. On the contrary, they fuel the fires of those people driven by injustice. Go on HLS - give us another reason to be angry!

WEF: Smashed windows and red paint

February 3rd, NYC:
400 protesters from the World Economic Forum converge on the doorstep of Parker Quillen (CEO of Quilcap, 22 million HLS shares). They leave the front of Quillen's building covered in red paint and every glass door smashed. Two weeks later, Quilcap pulls the plug on HLS.

March 4th, San Antonio, TX:
Activists bypass security and locked doors and leave a massive stink bomb in Marsh office.

March 5th, San Antonio, TX:
Marsh office has its locks glued.

March 14th, Boston, MA:
David Spina (State Street CEO, 15 million HLS shares) wakes at 3:30 a.m. to activists with bullhorns at his front door. Three weeks later, State Street divests from HLS.

March 20th, Nashville, TN:
HLS holds a booth at the Society of Toxicology Conference aiming to convince the industry they are a viable company. Activists are close behind. HLS's table, literature racks and displays are all thrown to the ground. A 120 decibel alarm goes off inside the conference hall. It's glued to the building and can't be removed or turned off. A message to future conference planners: if you invite HLS, we'll be right behind!

March 25th, Chicago, IL:
Activists smash out the windows at the home of Thomas Wiegand, head of Marsh's Chicago office. His garage, porch, and the sides of his house are spray-painted and the front is covered in red paint.

April 31st, Engelwood, CO:
Activists blockade the home phones of Spencer Edwards (HLS's new market maker) executives all day. That evening, they visit the home of one executive and find several hundred dollars of freshly laundered clothes awaiting them! They return the gift by lining his front and back doors with HLS literature. While another executive holds Easter festivities in his garage next door, activists find the front door has been left open for them! They enter his home and leave leaflets strewn about. The next day activists visit Edwards's offices, smashing files, paintings, desks and phones. 30 stink bombs explode. That very day Spencer Edwards drops HLS.

DIRECT ACTION -at a glance

As if there was any doubt that using lawsuits, restraining orders and injunctions to silence above ground activists only insures the swelling of the underground movement- since just the last newsletter we've seen:

- 34,640 phone calls (in 4 days)
- 31 stink bombs
- 20+ office attacks
- 12+ home visits
- 11+ smashed windows
- 3 high decibel alarms
- 1 rotten fruit attack
- 1 flying lamp

April 8th, Boston, MA:
Marsh's office is strewn with pieces of the Durain fruit, a VERY pungent fruit from South East Asia. Within hours the office is left smelling of Marsh's support of animal cruelty.

April 18th, Cyberspace:
Activists rig dumpstered computers to dial HLS's internal phone lines repeatedly. Left in colleges and office buildings for four days before they are found, the computers make a total of 34,640 calls to HLS.

April 21st, NYC:
World Week for Animals In Laboratories protesters visit the homes of Marsh executives at their posh, Upper East Side homes, leaving their glass doors and lobbies smashed. Lamps fly through the air, tables and chairs are flipped and vases are left in pieces.

TURNING JAPANESE

- WE DONT THINK SO...

Determined to expose the vivisection industry that HLS works within and send possible foriegn customers running, SHAC infiltrated several Japanese animal testing labs last fall and caught on tape some of the most horrific images of animal experimentation we have seen in recent years. SHAC will go to whatever lenghts necessary to expose HLS and those torturing animals for fraudulent science. "Your secret is our secret" indeed!

Visit www.shac.net for more information and pictures from the undercover investigation.

Although it is rarely mentioned, Japan is the third largest market for chemicals and drugs. It has some of the world's biggest companies in these industries and dominates the Asian market. Thus it is also one of the most important regions HLS has for generating new business. In fact the ties between HLS and Japanese industry are strong.

One customer, Nissan Chemical, has an employee with an office in the UK site handling the regulations for putting products on the Japanese market. More significantly, Chugai Boyeki Corp, known in America as CBC (America), hosts an office for HLS in Japan, employing several people to promote HLS's services to the Japanese market. This is provided through Huntingdon Life Sciences Co. Ltd. of Japan which is 50% owned by HLS and 50% owned by CBC.

Another customer is Yamanouchi, behind the Shaklee brand in the US. They were responsible for the infamous 1997 experiment to break beagle legs in order to test a fracture cream! Fortunately the experiment was exposed and following pressure from animal rights groups, the public, and celebrities such as Kim Basinger, it was cancelled and the beagles were released. (You can read about the fate of one of these lucky beagles elsewhere on page 3). This was only one of many experiments that Yamanouchi have paid for at HLS. They have been doing the same in England, and we know that in one case they had litters of four week old puppies sent to suffer in HLS. There has been a campaign against Yamanouchi in England, which formed part of the company's reason for closing down one of their sites.

Given that there is only a newborn animal rights movement in Japan, and it's remoteness from other centers of activity, HLS no doubt thought that at least there they would find the space to operate in peace.

Not so. May saw the important CPHI conference being held in Tokyo, with HLS having a table. Here was one of HLS's best opportunities to sell their animal torture products to the Japanese. It was important enough for them to send their sales manager, Alan Cummins, from the UK to look after their table. Several activists travelled to it, meeting up with local activists, and infiltrated the conference. On the first day they videoed HLS at work, though the other delegates seemed to be avoiding the controversial company. When they spoke with Alan, he was forthcoming, even dropping the names of several customers. Yes Sumitomo, we know all about you!

The next day HLS representatives went into shock as a banner was rolled out in front of their table and a demo began inside the conference hall. Every one there came to watch this unprecedented event and HLS's name was truly dragged through the mud in front of its potential and existing customers where they never expected it.

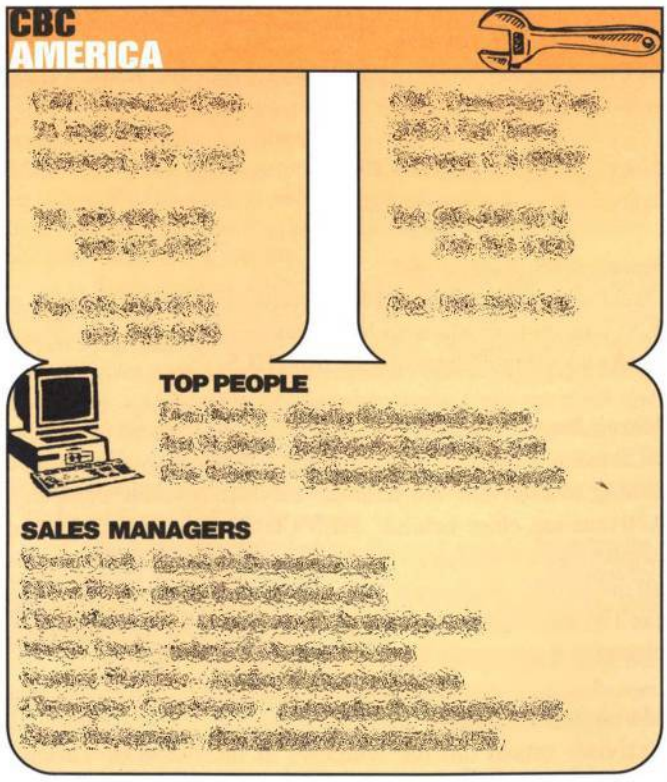

HLS is spending several million a year in its sales push to bring in new orders, and Japan is one of the areas where it is doing this. It needs to bring in new orders so that it can repay the mountain of debt crushing it. We intend to ensure that they don't fill up their order book, and you can play a part in this.

We want you to contact CBC America and ask them to close down the office they supply for HLS and sever all business connections with them. CBC America are behind the Ganz, Toli, Ceres, Computar and Discmatic brand names in the US. They have two offices, basically sales fronts, one on Long Island and the other in California.

JAPAN AND HLS -at a glance

So why is Japan such an important market for HLS?

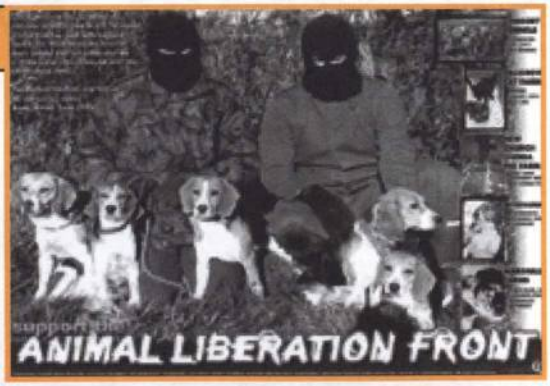

- It is home to the biggest pharmaceutial and chemical companies in Asia.
- Japanese companies use HLS as a base in Europe, and send business HLS's way as a result.
- Japan is a market where it thinks it can develop away from SHAC. HLS has spent considerable effort building up its connections in Japan.
- If Japanese companies start pulling their business away from HLS then the company will lose a lot of orders it will find it hard to survive without. Especially when they have spent so much money on marketing in this country.
